AUCTION SALES.

Frederick W. Feldner, Atty. at Law, Fidelity Building, Baltimore, Md.

IMPORTANT AUCTION SALE, FOR THE PURPOSE OF CLOSING THE BUSINESS ORGANIZED BY THE LATE OTTMAR MERGENTHALER, BALTIMORE, MD.

The undersigned will sell by PUBLIC AUCTION, on the PREMISES, on WEDNESDAY, October 25, 1905, at 10 o'clock A. M., the FEE-SIMPLE, VALUABLE MANUFACTURING PLANT, comprising the LOT OF GROUND having a front on the north side of Clagett Street and Baltimore and Ohio Railroad of 130 feet, with a depth along the west side of Allen Street of 370 feet to the south side of Clem Street, with the FACTORY BUILDINGS thereon erected—dimensions, 270 feet by 130 feet at its greatest width (containing 18,262 square feet)—being the best-equipped Machine Shop in Baltimore City, located on the edge of the HARBOR at LOCUST POINT, with a switch in the yard connecting with the BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD, and near the WABASH TERMINAL.

The shop was established by the late OTTMAR MERGENTHALER, the INVENTOR of the LINOTYPE, and since his death has been in operation by the OTT. MERGENTHALER COMPANY, and has been used for manufacturing LINOTYPE machines, AUTOMOBILE ENGINES and similar automatic machines of medium size. The shop is remarkably well fitted for such purposes, can accommodate about 200 hands, and is now in operation, and can be immediately utilized by purchaser.

ALSO

THE PLANT AND MACHINERY HEREIN, in brief containing, among other large lots, the following:

8 Planers, 33 Lathes, 35 Milling Machines, 7 Profiling Machines, 8 Screw Machines, 25 Grinders, 24 Drill Presses, 2 Gear Cutters, Westinghouse Engine, Campbell Zell Boiler, and a large lot of Miscellaneous Machinery, Tools, Shafting, Belting, Pulleys, &c., &c., usually found in the very best and up-to-date machine shops.

OFFICE FURNITURE, IRON SAFE, Desks, Clock, etc.

A FULL DESCRIPTION OF THE MACHINERY, ETC., WILL BE FOUND IN CATALOGUE, WHICH MAY BE HAD UPON APPLICATION OF EITHER THE UNDERSIGNED OR AUCTIONEERS.

The property, machinery, etc., etc., comprising the whole as a going plant, will first be offered as an ENTIRETY, after which the fee-simple lot and buildings thereon SINGLY, and then SEPARATELY EACH PARCEL OF THE ABOVE MACHINERY AND EQUIPMENT, or in BULK.

The undersigned reserve the right to reject any bids and to accept whichever of these in their judgment shall bring the most money for the plant and property.

THE UNDERSIGNED WILL BE PLEASED TO RECEIVE ANY PRIVATE OFFERS FOR SAID PROPERTY AND PLANT UP TO THE TIME OF SALE.

Plat of lot, showing location of buildings, can also be had from the undersigned.

TERMS: For the Machinery, CASH, and for the Real Estate, ½ cash, deferred payment for which may be secured by mortgage to bear interest from day of sale on terms to be agreed upon.

INSPECTION OF PROPERTY AND PLANT IS INVITED.

A suitable deposit required at sale.

REFEREES' NOTICES.

In pursuance of an interlocutory judgment of partition and sale made and entered in the above-entitled action, bearing date the thirtieth day of August, one thousand nine hundred and five, I, the undersigned, the referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction at the New York Real Estate Salesrooms, Nos. 14-16 Vesey Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 2d day of November, one thousand nine hundred and five, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, by Joseph P. Day, auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows:

All that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, situate, lying, and being in the former Town and County of Westchester, now in the Twenty-fourth Ward, in the Borough of the Bronx, City of New York, County and State of New York, bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at a point on the southerly side of the Southern Westchester Turnpike Road, so called, adjoining land of Mr. Lewis; thence running southerly along said Lewis land two hundred and seven (207) feet to land laid out on a map of the Village of Unionport; thence running easterly along the land of the Village of Unionport ninety (90) feet; thence running northerly along other land of Coner Kerin about two hundred and eight (208) feet to a point on the southerly side of the Southern Westchester Turnpike Road, distant ninety-nine feet easterly from said Lewis land; thence running westerly along said Turnpike Road ninety-nine (99) feet to the point or place of beginning, containing all the land in said bounds.

Excepting therefrom, however, a strip ninety-eight (98) feet in width, front and rear, and thirty-three and twenty-one hundredths (33.20) feet in depth on the westerly side thereof and thirty-two and ninety-four one-hundredths (32.94) feet in depth on the easterly side thereof, being that portion of the said premises vested in the City of New York, in proceedings taken for the widening of the Southern Westchester Turnpike Road.

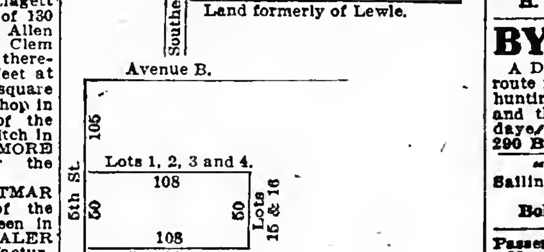
And, also, all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying, and being in the former Town and County of Westchester, now in the Twenty-fourth Ward, in the Borough of the Bronx, City of New York, County and State of New York, known on a certain map entitled "Map of property of the Estate of William H. Bowne, deceased, Westchester, N. Y.," made by I. Coles, July, 1893, and filed in the office of the Register of the County of Westchester by the numbers 9 and 10, which said lots taken together are bounded and described as follows:

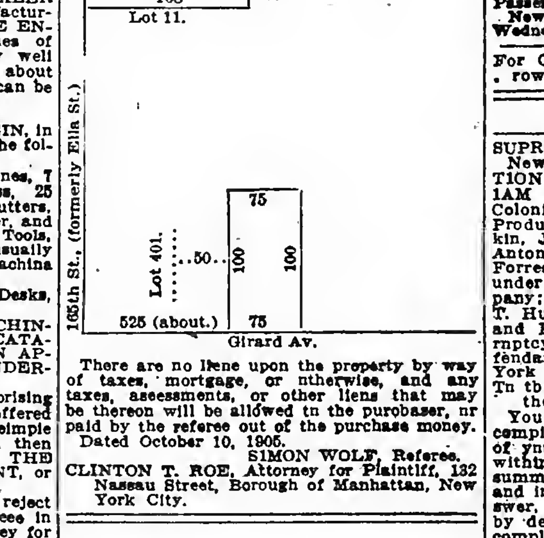
Beginning at a point on the southerly side of Fifth Street distant westerly from the southwesterly corner of Fifth Street and Avenue B one hundred and five (105) feet; thence running southerly along lots numbered one, two, three, and four, one hundred and eight (108) feet to lot number sixteen; thence westerly along lots numbers fifteen and sixteen, fifty (50) feet to lot number eleven; thence northerly along lot number eleven, one hundred and eight (108) feet to the southerly side of Fifth Street; thence easterly along the southerly side of Fifth Street fifty (50) feet to the point or place of beginning.

And, also, all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying, and being in the Twenty-third Ward of the City of New York, in the County and State of New York, being a part of lot number 401 on the "Map of West Morrisania, being a part of the farm of William H. Morris, Esq., in the Town of West Farms, County of Westchester, N. Y.," made by Andrew Findlay, Surveyor, dated Westchester, June 1st, 1852, and now on file in the office of the Register of Westchester County, which said lots hereby conveyed taken together are bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at a point on the easterly line or side of Girard Avenue, distant fifty (50) feet southerly from the northerly boundary line of said lot number 401, and about five hundred and twenty-five (525) feet southerly from the southeasterly corner of 165th Street (formerly Ella Street) and said avenue; thence running easterly at right angles to Girard Avenue one hundred (100) feet; thence southerly and parallel with Girard Avenue seventy-five (75) feet; thence westerly and at right angles to Girard Avenue one hundred (100) feet to the easterly line or side of said avenue; and thence northerly and along the said easterly line or side of said avenue seventy-five (75) feet to the point or place of beginning.

The following are diagrams of the several parcels to be sold. The street number is unknown. The premises are unimproved.





There are no liens upon the property by way of taxes, mortgage, or otherwise, and any taxes, assessments, or other liens that may be thereon will be allowed to the purchaser, or paid by the referee out of the purchase money.

Dated October 10, 1905.

LEGAL NOTICES.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE Booth Water Softening Company, a domestic corporation having its principal business office in the town of Huntington, County of Suffolk and State of New York, will apply to the Supreme Court of the State of New York, at a Special Term thereof to be held at the Court House, in the Borough of Brooklyn, County of Kings and State of New York, on the 27th day of October, 1905, at 10:30 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, for an order authorizing said corporation to change its corporate name to the L. M. Booth Company.

Dated New York City, N. Y., Sept. 6th, 1905.

BOOTH WATER SOFTENING COMPANY,
L. M. Booth, President.

HENRY M. BRIGHAM, Attorney for Petitioner, 37 Liberty Street, Manhattan, New York City.

SURROGATE NOTICES.

TO THE CREDITORS OF THE ESTATE OF WILLIAM W. CARSON, dec'd:

Take notice that I intend to apply to the Surrogate of the County of Orange for the issuance of LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION, etc., with the will annexed, of the estate of WILLIAM W. CARSON, deceased, who resided in the City of Newburgh, in the County of Orange, N. Y., but who died in the City, County, and State of New York, and that the amount of my bond is to be fixed pursuant to the provisions of Section 2664 of the Code of Civil Procedure, at twice the amount of the claims of creditors against the said estate.

All creditors of said estate are required to present their claims to Hon. Obdiah P. Howell, Surrogate of Orange County, on or before November 11th, 1905, at his office, in the Village of Goshen, Orange County, N. Y.—Dated October 10, 1905. MELVIN L. PARKER.

GIRL'S THEFT REVEALED THROUGH SAFE ROBBERY

Cashier Confesses That She Has Stolen for Years.

RANDOM REMARK GAVE A CLUE

Miss Golding Was Engaged, and Paid for the Young Man's Theatre Seats and Suppers.

The Larkin Soap Company, which has a New York branch at 4 and 6 White Street, considers that it was lucky to have its safe robbed of $600 on the night of Sept. 26.

The thief has not been arrested and the money has not been recovered, but Edward F. May, local manager of the concern, knows, as a result of the investigation into the robbery, of the existence of a leak which had cost the company many times the amount involved in the robbery, and has corrected the leakage.

There was no connection between the safe robbery and the other loss. When a detective agency was called in to run down the safe robber there was not the slightest idea that the Larkin Company was being systematically robbed by one of its trusted employes. It was while the investigation was on, and then accidentally, that the facts came out.

As a consequence of the revelation Mary E. Golding, 25 years old, who boarded at 240A Hart Street, Brooklyn, was arraigned in the Tombs Court yesterday on the charge of petty larceny. At the time of her arrest Miss Golding was employed as the cashier of the Larkin Company at a salary of $15 a week, and enjoyed the fullest confidence of her employers.

Miss Golding obtained a position with the company some seven years ago, at which time she was a resident of Buffalo. Four years ago she was transferred to the New York branch and made cashier.

Looked Like an "Inside" Job.

When the safe was robbed and the detective agency was retained to find the thief, there was every evidence that it was an inside job.

Detective L. A. Newcome was introduced to Miss Golding. It was said that she would assist him in unravelling the problem of the theft. Mr. Newcome had been at work several days and was beginning to rely upon Miss Golding when a random remark led him to suspect her.

Taking a chance Mr. Newcome said to her that the safe robbery had not been the only loss the Larkin Company had sustained. Miss Golding seemed confused. The detective then told her that if she had anything to tell him he was at his office at 8 o'clock every morning. Miss Golding walked abruptly away.

Mr. Newcome told one of his men to watch Miss Golding. For two days the detective discovered nothing. On the third day he followed the girl to a theatre, where she purchased two expensive seats, and that night he saw her enter the theatre with a fashionably dressed young man.

The next day Mr. Newcome mentioned, as if incidentally, the occurrence of the night before. He had also learned that Miss Golding had gone with the young man to supper after the theatre, and had paid the bill. He suggested that she call on him.

She Was Waiting for Him.

Thursday morning, when he went to his place of business, Miss Golding was waiting for him.

"I suppose you are ready to tell me everything?" he said.

"I am," was her unexpected reply. "I have been stealing from the company for three years and I am sick of it."

Once in Newcome's office Miss Golding made a full confession, which she signed. She said that after she had been cashier for a short time she noticed that there was no check on the money received as against the orders sent out. Part of her work was to open the mail, and found when she slipped a ten-dollar bill into her pocket, that she was safe from detection.

"My parents are poor," she told Newcome, "and I have an invalid sister. I wanted to help them, and was not able to do so with my salary. When I saw how easy it was I began systematically to rob the company. I don't know how much I took, but it was at least $1,500. I had the satisfaction of knowing that those I loved were having all they needed."

"I don't know how much Miss Golding took," said Newcome yesterday. "Mr. May and I went over the accounts for three days, and found that she had taken $50. The young man who accompanied her to the theatre the other night was engaged to marry her, and she spent a good deal of money in his company. She believes that he will help her to make good her stealings."

Prison in Default of Bail.

When she was arraigned in the Tombs Court yesterday morning Miss Golding told Magistrate Finn of the use to which she had put the money taken by her. The Magistrate postponed the hearing, placing her under $300 bond, in default of which she was remanded to prison.

The Larkin Company has a new system of checking by which all moneys must be accounted for before orders are filled.

"If it hadn't been for the safe robbery," Mr. Newcome said, after Miss Golding had been taken to a cell in the Tombs, "the Larkin Company might never have known of the girl's stealings, so I suppose it was fortunate for them that their safe was entered. We know who robbed the safe and an arrest will soon be made."

Newcome said that Mary Golding's parents are self-supporting and that her father is a hard-working railroad employe.

PASSED 100 BAD CHECKS.

Maybe More, the Prisoner Doesn't Remember the Exact Number.

A man who said he was Max Semel, and lived at 219 Bowery, told Magistrate Steinert when he was arraigned in Essex Market Court yesterday on a charge of petit larceny that he had passed so many bad checks on the east side that he was unable to remember the number.

"There were more than a hundred, at least," he said.

Detectives Hart and Lander arrested Semel at 25 Ludlow Street, where he had passed two bad checks, one for $7.75, and the other for $4, on Philip Cohen, a saloonkeeper. The checks were made payable to himself and were signed "Joe Teitel." Both were drawn on the State Bank. Later the detectives learned that Semel had passed similar checks on Isaac Fine of 56 Orchard Street, Jacob Spitzer of 37 Orchard Street, and several others in that neighborhood.

"It is fortunate that the checks were not for larger amounts," said the Magistrate. "If they had been, you would be held on a much more serious charge. How many of these checks have you passed?"

"I don't know," was the reply. "I met a man in a park on East Eighth Street a few weeks ago and he asked me if I didn't want to make some easy money. I told him I did, and he gave me three blank check books on the State Bank. Each book contained fifty checks. The man advised me to make the amounts small, as I was less likely to get caught. I made some of the checks out, and had no trouble in getting them cashed. I don't know how many I got cashed, but I have only half of one of the three books left."

$2,000 TO CONSCIENCE FUND.

Contributor to Jersey City's Treasury Wouldn't Give His Name.

William F. Ely, City Treasurer of Jersey City, received yesterday a $2,000 contribution to the conscience fund. Mr. Ely would not give the name of the contributor.

"As a matter of fact," said he, "I do not know his name, and, as he said he was acting for another, his description would not furnish a clue to the conscience-stricken individual. I was sitting in my office when a man entered and asked me if I would accept $2,000 to be placed to the city's credit, without knowing from whom it came. I asked him if it was 'conscience money,' and he said I could enter it in that way if I desired to. I told him the money would be welcome. He then handed me a $1,000 note, one for $500, and five for $100 each. I gave him a receipt. How or by whom the city was defrauded of that amount I haven't the slightest idea. Restitutions of that kind are usually made by mail. It is the first time I ever received such a contribution personally."

The money will be paid into the Sinking Fund.

PERISHABLE DOG FOR SALE.

He Is Now Being Boarded by the United States Government.

Collector Stranahan has a dog which he wants to get rid of. The animal arrived on the Pennsylvania Sept. 6 and immediately became a charge on the hospitality of the United States, as its owner failed to appear and claim it. For more than a month the dog has been boarding at Hexemer's Hoboken Riding Academy at a daily expense to the Government of the United States of 75 cents. Much red tape had to be unwound before the Collector was able to announce that the animal will be sold at a special sale to be held next Tuesday in the seizure room at the Appraiser's Warehouse in this city.

Acting Deputy Collector Storey will represent Mr. Stranahan and see that the dog gets a good master and home. The official Custom House papers describe the animal as "unclaimed perishable merchandise." He will be sold to the highest bidder.

Exchange Seat Again Brings $85,000.

The top price for a seat on the Stock Exchange, $85,000, was paid yesterday for the second time, when the membership of Henry M. Hunter went to Charles W. Saacke. The record was made a few days ago, when the seat of the late W. E. Strong was sold.

New York Building Loan Decision.

Walter S. Logan, one of the referees in the case of the New York Building Loan-Banking Company, now in the hands of a receiver, handed down a decision yesterday regarding the claims of members of the company who filed applications for withdrawal of shares. Mr. Logan finds that these members are not entitled to preference over the others in the settlement of the company's affairs.

ALFRED DE MUSSET.

A New Edition of His Complete Writings Translated Into English—His Place in Literature.

ALFRED DE MUSSET, even in France, has a reputation curiously difficult to define or analyze, and, necessarily, his reputation among readers of English is but a reflection, an echo, certainly subdued and more or less perverted, of his reputation in France. Three or four of his plays still, from time to time, reappear upon the stage, and when they are rendered by actors with adequate passion and refinement, command admiration decidedly greater than was accorded them in the lifetime of their unfortunate writer. Certain of his verses are frequently praised and not infrequently cited, and there is reported a revival of demand for a portion of his novels and his published dramas. But the impression the general reader of French literature is most likely to get is that poor de Musset is oftenest spoken of and best remembered on account of his much-recounted and much-commented experience with George Sand, and beyond this source of current memory of him there remains of his writings, actually read in these days, barely enough to fill a couple of small volumes.

Yet it has occurred to a publishing house in New York (the Edwin C. Hill Company) to bring out in ten good-sized volumes, quite carefully illustrated, translations by various hands of his "Complete Writings." As the edition is of a thousand copies, and is handsomely produced, it is to be assumed that expert judgment finds evidence of an interest in possessing de Musset's writings which justifies the venture, and exceeds what we should have supposed to exist. The publishers would seem even to be confident of an interest that will put up with some pretty bad rendering of de Musset, since the translations, some of which are nearly as good as could be hoped for, include not a few that are singularly awkward, defective, and misleading. But if this elaborate edition in English shall turn the attention of readers to the really good work of ds Musset and suggest to them to master it in French, so far as those born to an alien tongue can hope to master it, it will have served a good purpose.

DE MUSSET'S best work was done before he was 30, most of it between the ages of 23 and 26, and even in this short period of production the earlier output was better than the later. His very earliest was startlingly precocious, but hardly forshadowed what was so soon to follow. It was the fluent expression, in the form of imitation, of intense admiration for the then heroes of the romantic school, and its sincerity was undoubted. But within a few years, almost within a few months, it was to give place to work in which, professedly and actually, he sought to combine and did combine the best elements of the romantic and the classic schools and to these added a grace, suavity, strength, and sobriety quite his own. He was very young, a mere lad. He was plunged in the dissipations of youth in more than one direction. He was courted, flattered, beloved, betrayed, and lived in a whirl of emotion, sentiment, passion. His brother Paul, six years older, and writing more than twenty years after the death of Alfred, describes his existence at this period in a manner that reveals much and implies more of its tremendous excitement, its moral and mental disorderliness, its approach to what would now be regarded as a form of madness. Yet it was precisely at this time that de Musset produced his plays—"Les Caprices de Marianne," "On ne badine pas avec l'Amour,"—and his poems "Les Nuits," "A Lamartine"—and a few others by which he has lived and will live in the literature of his language. And, as it seems to the present writer, the essential characteristic of these productions, which has enabled them to survive, is their dignity, their innate, subtle, adequate conformity to the conditions imposed by their subjects. Their sparkling wit, their intense passion, their humor and their pathos, the grace of manner, the sweep of swift advance to tragic culmination, are almost unfailingly and imperatively fitting. The oftener one reads them, if one surrenders himself to their spirit, the more complete and engaging is this sense of their admirable and compelling composition—not in the narrow sense of the word, but in the artist's sense.

***

IT requires something like temerity to compare any writer to Shakespeare, but so deliberate and responsible a critic as Henry James has made the venture in the case of de Musset with reference to the pure gayety, the native joyousness of his lighter vein. The kinship is even more apparent in the fortunate daring with which each sets the amusing and grotesque features of common life beside the profoundest tragedy. Nearly every character in "On ne badine pas avec l'Amour," save the two women toward whose fate the drama resistlessly moves—even the man who brings that fate upon them—is touched with ridicule and satire. And it is only at the last moment that the drama turns from high comedy to intense tragedy. But the movement is the movement of life; the crisis arrives with perfect simplicity; it is more than convincing, it is inevitable. The reader, or the spectator, feels in very deed that the most wayward, the lightest-minded of us "ne badine pas" with the elemental passion. Such emotion it is the privilege of few—very few—among the writers of any nation to disclose to us. And in works which, out of a pretty large output would, as we have intimated, fill only a couple of small volumes, de Musset does this. E. C.

MONTAIGNE.

Prof. Edward Dowden's New Life of the Great Essayist in the French Men of Letters Series.*

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS by

H. W. BOYNTON.

PROF. DOWDEN'S Montaigne has the quality we always look for in the work of that capable critic. This writer is not a virtuoso among biographers; but what he lacks in brilliancy is more than made up for in sober force. Not that hs is pedantic or plodding; it is rather to be suggested that his method has a certain quiet security, a "grace abounding" of the literary sort, which parts the best criticism as far from ths doctoral thesis product on the one hand as from the pleasing flamboyancies of a Huneker or a Chesterton on the other. Montaigne, with his "classical" value, and ever-new and flatteringly modern discursiveness, is tempting if not fair game for the critic of either extreme. It is not difficult for your true scholar to approximate very nearly the date of nativity of a given essay; it is still easier for your true discursor to indite his notion of the relstion of that essay to the critic himself. The msthod has its merits, but it is, after all, not the soundest method of biography; certainly it is not Prof. Dowden's method. He has in this instance a theme far less difficult than that which he lately encountered in Browning. Montaigne died a long time ago, and his principal object in life was to make himself understood. No serious problems of fact remain to be solved in connection with his character or work. Otherwise, to be sure, he had not a few matters in common with that uncouth modern whose "sprightly step and inquiring eye" Landor commended so highly.

Nevertheless, Prof. Dowden has had before him a task quite as important in its way as any which can fall to a biographer. If there is no direct problem to be attacked in dealing with such a name as Montaigne's, no fresh matter to be elucidated, no new point of view to be reasonably taken, a subtle difficulty still remains; our great name must be divested of its memorial shroud, must take on bone and flesh again, and be seen to breathe. In this instance the happiest material lay to the biographer's hand, but material does not commonly arrange itself into a product. Even persons who have loved and lived with the Essays, which are all about himself, may have a vague or false notion of the man who wrote them. Their very diversity, their apparent and somewhat eagerly avowed casualness, are somewhat misleading. What a nice old duffer he was, how amiably pedantic, how frankly amorous, how engagingly conceited; in some such amber of kindly condescension Montaigne is embalmed to ths world. Dowden sees him alive, vigorous, efficient, a man of the world as well as a man of letters, a useful man as well as a talkative one.

If Montaigne had chanced to live in the present era of advanced civilization (this we acknowledge to be a foolish speculation) he might have "succeeded" in almost any honorable calling. Hs could not have been a Rockefeller, (vide Tarbell, passim,) and it is probable that he would have failed as a ward politician, (vide anybody;) but the man who could serve two terms as Mayor of Bordeaux, in the troublous times of the Henris of France and of Navarre, and serve with distinction, had in his constitution considerably more of the Jerome than of the Croker, though most of him was Montaigne.

***

THIS man Prof. Dowden has brought before us, in form and feature as he was, no easy matter. And the credit of the achievement is not diminished by the fact that the Dowdsn form and feature are somewhat clearly present in ths background. A biographer must after all write from, if not about, himself. The phraseology employed is as much as possible Montaigne's own. Few passages of any length are quoted, but the narrative is largely a mosaic of remembered phrases which the biographer wisely leaves unincumbered by quotation marks. It is a method requiring great nicety of discrimination. If any one thinks it is easier to invent words about a writer so discursive and voluminous as Montaigne than to quote him effectively, let him try it and learn to the contrary. Everything the man wrote may be intelligible and interesting, but

With Montaigne that question is, says our biographer, especially hard to answer.

HOW full and varied an experience of life fell to our humorous philosopher it is worth while for us to recall. With all his literary addictions, his quaint bookishness, his instinct for verbal expression, his "politeness" in the old sense of the word, the fact remains that he was mainly absorbed, not in ideas and books, but in humankind and the common activities of humankind. In his pursuit of experience he displayed that union of eagerness and tranquillity which marks the exceptional personality, to which, when it produces something, we give the convenient label of genius. Born to troublous times, he passed through them not without diversity of fortune, certainly not without bearing his full share of the conflict, yet with untroubled spirit. It was a period of excesses, social, political, and religious. Religion, in particular, had become sponsor for the basest crimes. The idealism of the earlier Renaissance period was giving way to pedantry, libertinism, or equally unbridled bigotry. A monster like Calvin was to be offset by a prodigy such as the St. Bartholomew massacre. The ideal of justice had little hold upon men's minds; crime was simply something inconvenient done by the other party; when done by one's own party, it was really so near a virtue that there was no use in splitting the last determining hair of evidence one way or the other. That was very many years ago. "He who in our age," says Montaigne, with his usual placid candor, "is but a parricide and a sacrilegious person is a man of worth and of honor." For himself, he was one of the most honorable men of his time; and, if we except his outspoken heterodoxy in the theory and practice of the sexual relation, of any modern age.

Montaigne's great-grandfather was a thriving wine merchant in Bordeaux, who summed up his bourgeois career in the approved fashion by purchasing the estate of a noble but impoverished family, and founding a new house of Montaigne. His son, keeping to the original trade, increased the family assets. The third in line, father of the essayist, seems to have been content to be Seigneur de Montaigne. Like his brothers, he was apparently a man of cultivation if not of profound learning. He served in the Italian wars, and on his way back to France met and married a girl of Spanish-Hebrew blood. Michel de Montaigne was the oldest son of this marriage to survive infancy. Later his father proved himself by no means an adventurous degenerate from a sturdy stock. He displayed both the ideal of marriage. The passion of love was a very different thing.

Five years after his marriage Montaigne resigned his Councilorship and retired to his secluded tower to meditate and to write. Thence he emerges from time to time to re-enter the world for a moment and to take some part in her affairs. He is made a Knight of the Order of St. Michael, and later one of the numerous honorary Gentlemen in Ordinary of the King's Bedchamber. He spends a year and a half in travel, and is recalled from Rome to serve two terms as Mayor of Bordeaux, a service of no little responsibility and difficulty. Thereafter he made his final return to Rome to complete his essays, and not long after to die there, being not yet sixty.

SURELY this was the career of a useful and honorable man. One flaw only in his life and philosophy, according to our standard, is to be discerned in his attitude toward what we call the problem of sex. Naturally we, with our cherished prudery, or prurience, for the things commonly go together, are disposed to smirk a good deal about his "immorality." Montaigne, like Boccaccio, and Rabelais, and Fielding, is a writer highly condemned and widely read for his alleged nastiness. It cannot be said that he had an elevated notion of Woman. She might be a delightful mistress or an estimable consort; but it never occurred to him that she was "a perfect creature nobly planned," and he certainly would have given short shrift to her warnings and commands. He had no romantic conception of the relation of the sexes; his own romance was a friendship.

The love of man for woman, or of woman for man (need we apologize for saying it?) meant to him a delirium induced by a strong instinct toward the performance of a natural function. He was able to value a chastity in his father and his friend to which he himself could not attain; it seemed to him a little beyond the normal. In short, he expressed, without prudery or any other device of concealment, the opinion which many—perhaps most—men have held, for better or worse, since the world began, and which only a race of "supermen" can be expected altogether to outgrow. He alludes to his own amorous advsntures without shame, and even with complacency, but he is never merely obscene. Robust and licentious, let us call his speech; let us even admit now and then an approach to a leer on that otherwise amiable countenance; at all events his confessions lack that abject and shameful matter and manner which belong to the indecent revelations of a Rousseau. He knows that his frank speech is going to expose him to the lifted hands of prudery, but it is a part of his task to conceal nothing. His object is to throw all possible light upon the man he is and

EARLY EXPANSION.

Dr. Geer's Volume on Our Continental Growth in "The History of North America."

THIS is the history of a movement, not of a period or an event. Indeed, the name is not perfectly descriptive of the subject, and the reader who consults this volume for a detailed and lengthy account of the acquisition of Louisiana will be disappointed. What Dr. Geer attempts to do is to write the history of the trans-Alleghany region, and then show how we acquired Louisiana and finally to trace the subsequent history of that vast country. That is to say, his subject is the continental expansion of the United States, with the exception of Texas, the Mexican cession, and the Oregon region. For some unexplained reason, probably because the subject is reserved for a future volume in the history of North America, nothing is said about Missouri. Kansas, too, is slighted, possibly for the same reason. The earlier chapters relate the history of the country between the Alleghanies and the Mississippi, the territories northwest and south of the Ohio.

The Louisiana purchase itself is taken up in Chapter 12. It is intimately connected with the history of the trans-Alleghany country, the most important subject of whose history was the free navigation of the Mississippi. The purpose of President Jefferson in beginning those negotiations that finally led to the acquisition by the United States of the vast country between the Mississippi and the Rockies was merely to control the mouth of the river and so its navigation. Dr. Geer points out that at present the control of the country west of the Mississippi is of greater importance than the navigation of the river. This country cannot be said to have been obtained through the skill of Jefferson or the diplomacy of Livingston and Monroe. Livingston suggested selling it to some friendly power. None of them realized its immense importance to the United States. "Napoleon," says Dr. Geer, "really forced this Louisiana region upon them. * * * They took it because they could not get what they wanted without it." Considerable attention is given to the political and constitutional aspects of the purchase, and Napoleon's motives for selling Louisiana are explained.

DR. GEER takes up with care the history of the States which now form the great Northwest, and comes down to the admission of Montana in 1889. He shows the effects of European, particularly the German, immigration to this region. His conclusions are: "Judg-

IPSWICH TOWN.

IPSWICH IN THE MASSACHUSETTS BAY COLONY. Part I, Historical; Part II., Houses and Lands, with seven appendices. By Thomas Franklin Waters, President of the Ipswich Historical Society. One volume. Pp. vii.-556. 8vo. Cloth. Ipswich, Mass.: The Ipswich Historical Society.

MR. WATERS has produced an interesting history of an interesting New England town. He claims Macaulay as his model, and adds: "I have tried to tell accurately but in readable fashion the story of the builders of our town; their homes and home life, their employments, their Sabbath keeping, their love of learning, their administration of town affairs, their stern delusions, their heroism in war and in resistance to tyranny." Ipswich was a typical New England town, starting as most other towns started, and going through the usual tribulations. Founded in 1623, the town was called Agawam first; its name was changed to Ipswich in 1634. In 1667 one of its deputies to the General Court, Capt. Appleton, was not allowed to sit because he had signed a petition against the measures of Charles II. Ipswich, in fact, presented the largest petition against the establishment of Episcopacy, seventy-two freemen signing it, while only twenty-six signed one from Boston. In 1642 Ipswich freemen "granted that there shal be a free Schole"; and the school founded then is still "keeping" to-day. King Philip's war did not actually reach Ipswich town; but her sons took part in it, Daniel Denison being Commander in Chief of all the Massachusetts forces, and six score Ipswich men serving in the ranks. In 1656 Ipswich began to indulge in witches; but not until 1692, when Salem had set the pace, did the town join in exterminating witches and wizards. Giles Corey, who has the melancholy fame of being the only person pressed to death in this country, was an Ipswich man, and other victims came from the same place. During the wars with the French and the Indians in the time of William and Mary Ipswich played a good part, hundreds of men carrying arms in defense of their neighbors' homes as well

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

More Books for the Book Shelf.

There would be little doing for the publisher if we all followed the excellent advice of the Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, "Read only books a year old." It is true that there are even new books not worth reading at all even after they are a year old, but there are books published every day which every man or woman who wishes to keep in touch with certain phases of thought, certain new ideas, certain new presentations of old ideas, or certain methods of doing certain things must read and had better read while the topics and the books are fresh. Here are some such books, popularly known as "serious" books, merely to distinguish them from stories, but certainly not serious in the sense that they are not interesting, timely, readable, or worth while. A book telling how to play the ancient game of golf may have more readability than a novel. It all depends upon how well the author writes and how fond you are of golf.

We do not have enough of this kind of book in this day. One or two hundred years ago it was common enough to express ideas in the form of a dialogue. In fact, two thousand years ago the disputation was a favorite literary diversion, and Cicero's "Immortality of the Soul" is still a masterpiece of the dialogue. "A Modern Symposium" is a discussion of

THE BOOKSELLERS

No More "Dull Seasons" in the Trade —Talk About the Autumn Outlook.

ONE of the best-known booksellers in New York remarked the other day that events were rapidly moving to the point where the city would have no dull seasons. "New York," said he, "is rapidly getting in that regard to be like Paris. In Paris we have no dull seasons; when the Parisians go out of town the Americans come in. In New York, when the New Yorkers go away, all other Americans come in. Nobody stays long, perhaps, bnt the stream flows steadily. Time was, and that not very long ago, when here in our book shop, for instance, we had little to do in August and September; now there is less and less slackening of trade during those months. The visitors to the city furnish a steady and dependable custom."

From this and other observations it seems certain that the retail book trade, at least in New York, tends less and less to run in "seasons," and, as a natural consequence, that books tend less and less to be of the kind which are made for a particular season. Even Christmas books (as another bookseller remarked) are to a less and less extent books good for Christmas and for no other time—worth, say, $2 on Dec. 24 and 2 cents two days afterward.

A necessary result of this lack of differentiating features in the books of any particular season, this tendency to sell the same kind of hook all the year round, is a loss of some of the most picturesque features of the trade as for a long time we have known it. For instance, inquiries as to present conditions and prospects elicit the most encouraging replies as to the volume and steadiness of trade, and when that is said all is said. For, in general, there's no unanimous public rage after any particular book or kind of hook, and no concentration of trade energies in any particular line. Further mark of the prosperous uniformity already mentioned, the booksellers are not loading their shelves and counters with excess of the current crop of books. Whether fiction or what not—the current crop has its place, of course, and a conspicuous one, but it by no means overbalances those fit survivals of the literary contributions of the ages which should logically form, bnt have not always actually formed, the bulk of a bookseller's stock. All the dealers report the continuance of a drift they his University and several other institutions were less far removed from the City Hall than they are now, the students used to frequent this shop and make large purchases of school books—when the institutions emigrated the students came no more. Now, with the Subway and its expresses, these students have come back again, and the trade in school books—which had suffered sadly in that particular shop—has revived mightily.

The head of a shop in Twenty-third Street was asked a variety of questions abont the Autumn business, and especially about the "expectations" as to volume. He had just been giving his orders to the salesman of one of the publishing houses and he explained that such orders, without being extravagant, had been with him liberal. As what has been said above would lead you to expect, these orders had not been "bunched" upon particular lines, but distributed over the field, with especial reference to books with proved staying qualities. This particular bookseller did not expect to bank this season npon any "quick seller," or book a large edition of which could be rushed off and then the book forgotten. He spoke trustfully of certain hooks of certain authors not yet "classics" which were now, after several successful years, selling more copies than they had ever sold. "These," he said in effect, "are my jewels." And this particular policy of this particular bookseller gives as much as any other thing the keynote of the season. Naturally there is a reflex action upon the publishers. When the booksellers give their orders upon principles of this sort, the "gambling" element of the business, upon which a certain publisher in his confessions had so much insisted, is largely removed, or substituted at any rate, by a set of chances more nearly calculable.

All of which does not mean that yon will not find the usual piles of fiction in the usual places when yon visit your favorite shop. The piles are there, and some very big ones go very rapidly and some very small ones go very slowly. And in spite of the decline of "season books," you will find on the counters plenty of books of the elaborately illustrated sort which are expected to catch the eye of the buyers of gifts; much-illustrated editions of very lightweight sentimental fiction and verse, but especially books on the more pictorial corners of the earth—as Italy, India, France, England—with illustrations extraordinarily fine in effect and execution. Nearly every publishing house has provided at least one of these books, and one, as usual, has several. You will find, too, a generous variety of histori-

NAPOLEON'S SON.

Mr. de Wertheimer's Court-Newsman's Life of the Duke of Reichstadt.*

THE choice of a good name is highly advisable; sometimes one can make use of it in a way to bring in fame and money. The name of Napoleon, or even of Bonaparte, is still one to conjure with. It is to the fact that he was his father's son that the fame of the Duke of Reichstadt is due; he did nothing—he was allowed to do nothing; the chronicle of his life is mainly of small beer. Yet writers with some pretensions to be historians dig up unimportant facts about his short life, and exult over new discoveries, and the public runs to buy their reports of their treasure trove. The shadow of a great name surrounds him, and historical writers record and discuss his every act as if he had been a real King, instead of merely the If, Yes, and Perhaps of Modern European History.

MR. EDWARD DE WERTHEIMER is the latest writer to make a study of Napoleon's son. His energy and thoroughness are to be commended; he has had access to the Royal and Imperial Archives of Vienna, and to those of the various State departments, and to many private collections, and it seems as if what he had not discovered would not be worth discovering hereafter. This is not to be taken as admitting the worth of what he has found already. He begins his life of the Duke with the marriage of Napoleon and the Archduchess Marie Louise of Austria, and traces it almost day by day to his death at the age of 21. Nothing is too unimportant for him; he has scraped everything together, sorted it out, sifted it, and arranged it in what must be acknowledged to be an interesting story. The matter is not important, however, as a fact; it is Napoleonic—that is its excuse.

The chapter on the political status of the Duke is the only one of consequence in the book. As the father was exiled to St. Helena, so the son was exiled in Vienna. The Byzantine Emperors suppressed uncomfortable relatives, not in quite the same way as, but no more effectively than, Europe suppressed the Duke of Reichstadt. There were adherents of Napoleon in France who said they were ready to work for his son. Possibly they were; his cousin, the Countess Napoleone Camerata, tried to abduct him from Vienna to put him at the head of his adherents. But most of the matter was merely talk, seemingly, by persons who cared more for Napoleon and his son only because they cared less for the Bourbons and the Orleans dynasties. But the Duke's importance was wholly in posse, not in esse.

During the time that elapsed between the success of the revolution and the election of the Duke of Orleans to the throne [of France] Metternich must certainly have thought of the Duke of Reichstadt as the possible future ruler of France. Under the cry of "Long live Napoleon II." there was fighting in the streets of Paris. It was the misfortune of the Emperor's son that, far from France and personally unknown to the French nation, he should then be living in Vienna under the control of the Austrian Court. Had he been present in the French capital at that critical moment, there is no doubt that the crown would have fallen to him.

A few pages earlier, referring to the illness of Louis XVIII. in 1823, Mr. de Wertheimer remarks:

> Had the Duke of Reichstadt been of a suitable age, and had his grandfather [the Emperor of Austria] and Metternich been willing to support him, truly no better moment could have been chosen for his proclamation.

There is something ludicrous in this insistence on the "IF." We all know if Cleopatra's nose had been longer—if the Wise Men of Gotham's bowl had been stronger—what would have happened. Whateley's "Historic Doubts" are as valuable as Mr. de Wertheimer's IFs in the case of the Duke of Reichstadt. There was more truth than most epigrams contain in the instructions of the French Ministry to the Prefects: "Napoleon's son belongs neither to history nor to France"; and Mr. de Wertheimer's attempt to exalt him into a historical personage of importance merely proves the truth of the Ministers' statement.

THE Duke lived and died. Mr. de Wertheimer is a very Jenkins in his description of him and his education. "Wonderfully spirited are the few lines in which he begs the Archduke to let him be present at the manoeuvres"; "his talent for adapting himself to other people's views, as though they were his own, was quite remarkable." Most Jenkinslike is this: "He always dressed in the latest fashion, and displayed a tendency to extreme eccentricity in his clothes. * * * It would have been more correct to see in all these peculiarities the eloquent expression of his unsatisfied longing to distinguish himself by brilliant exploits"! At the news of his passing away the French felt themselves face to face with a very unsettled destiny. Since the fall of Louis Philippe was imminent, the loss of the Duke of Reichstadt meant a great calamity to France"! The Duke died in 1832, the imminent fall of Louis Philippe occurred in 1848! It is evident that the Court newsman has overcome whatever there was of the historian in Mr. de Wertheimer.

The English translation of Mr. de Wertheimer's book is good. If the author had been less of a courtier we should have ascribed to the translator the crimes of leaving out year dates, making incomplete references, and omitting a real index—for English writers are given to the commission of such tortious acts upon their readers. We think that Mr. de Wertheimer, however, is probably to be held responsible for all the shortcomings of the book.

SENATOR BEVERIDGE'S ADVICE.

THE YOUNG MAN AND THE WORLD. By Albert J. Beveridge. 12mo. Pp. v.-404. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

THE young Indiana Senator writes of young men from the point of view of a young man who has found success coming his way. These papers are collected from the periodical in which they first appeared, the series growing from day to day largely out of the suggestions of the readers. He is one of the successful ones, and so it is natural that, like many others, he should be called upon to explain how he himself gained his success, and to lay down principles to guide others in doing the same. Success comes in so many different ways, and in response to so many different qualities, and so many different environments, that those who lay down rules seldom lay down the same ones; for which reason, if for no other, the validity of them all is open to some question. Good advice, however, is always in order, and Mr. Beveridge has much that is excellent, based on his own experience and observation.

> Learn your limitations, and start out in the direction for which you are fitted, is his first suggestion. Also keep working, and working hard, and don't worry. Read, and mingle with people, and cultivate nature. Take vacations. Courage, nerve, faith in one's self are necessary. And then he sums it all up at the end of his first paper in the words, "Be a man." The home and the father and mother in it are the subject of his next paper. On the question whether to go to college or not he takes a position that might be defined as a "straddle," but he answers in the affirmative, with advice to "cut out tobacco," and to those who cannot go he has little difficulty in showing that they have just as good a chance as those who can. Get married young; and if you are not strong enough to protect a wife and children you are not worth while. Mr. Beveridge advises the young lawyer, counsels the public speaker, and gives his views as to the young man thinking of entering the ministry. There is much to be done yet in the world, just as good a chance as ever, he thinks, and he quotes sadly the college students who feel that progress is finished, and that for them there is nothing to do but to eat, sleep, laugh, grieve, and go to their graves.

He goes over some of the fundamentals again, and comes to the conclusion that only the very highest types of effectiveness succeed. "Brain of ice, hand of steel, heart of fire, clear vision, and cold, steady grasp of the lever, and masterful and yet a passionate relentlessness"—these are necessary. This is, perhaps, rather a counsel of perfection to offer to the very numerous people who are not naturally endowed with that particular kind of brain, hand, heart, and vision. It seems rather a description of a certain class who have succeeded than an available direction for securing success. But that is the trouble with many of the guides to success. Mr. Beveridge has given a great deal of good advice that is much more tangible than this, however; much that will stimulate and help to strengthen.

Japan in 1693.

An édition de luxe, uniform with "Hakluyt's Voyages" and "Purchas His Pilgrimes," is being prepared by the Macmillan Company of the "History of Japan in 1693: Being an Account of the State and Government of That Empire; of Its Temples and Other Buildings; of Its Metals, Minerals, Plants, and Animals; of the Chronology and Succession of Its Emperors; Written in High Dutch by Engelbert Kaempfer, M. D., Physician to the Dutch Embassy to the Emperor's Court, and Translated by J. G. Scheuchzer, F. R. S." The work will be in three volumes with over 200 illustrations.

Early Calendars for 1906.

Dodd, Mead & Co. announce two calendars for the coming year. They are "The Beverly Calendar," with illustrations in colors by Harrison Fisher, and "The Nature Calendar," with quotations from the writings of Hamilton Wright Mabie, and pictures of natural scenery of woodland, field, sea and stream, colored by hand.

More Books for the Book Shelf.

The greatest things that have been written have been written primarily to entertain. Therefore, the chief mission of the novel, whether it is the great American novel or not, is to entertain. It should be good reading. It may be a problem novel—a sugar pill. When the problem gets bigger than the interest in the story, it fails to be a great book. As a matter of fact, most of us do not need many great books. A dozen will last a lifetime. A great many of us need to be amused and entertained by some book that leaves us better than we were when we began it. Mary, Queen of Scots, prayed, "Make me good. Let others be great." Every publisher knows that he can publish a few great books, but he tries to publish as many good books as possible. There are a hundred thousand people in the United States who would enjoy reading any one of them. Some would enjoy one, and some another. Possibly not all of them will appeal to all of you, but most of them will appeal to most of you.

The Pang Yanger
By Elma A. Travis, M. D. $1.50.
Written by a woman and a doctor about a strange mountain village in the Catskills and the people who live there, and especially one named Abijah Bead, an unusual character, with original and sometimes startling ideas of justice and revenge. This book is not so much the kind of one you would buy of a train boy to while away an hour's railroad travel, as one you would like to add to the row of books beside your bed, which you read more solicitously, and which add new portraits to your gallery of thoughts.

My Friend The Chauffeur
By C. N. and A. M. Williamson, authors of "The Lightning Conductor," "The Princess Passes." Illustrated by F. Lowenheim. $1.50.
This is a book which you read at any time, anywhere, in large slices, and don't lay down until it is finished, unless you must. Few books have been able to give such vivid descriptions of a delightful country without holding up the action of the story for a single minute. It is romance, foreign travel, and motoring combined.

The Work of Our Hands
By H. A. Mitchell Keays, author of "He That Eateth Bread With Me." $1.50.
A man gets rich managing a large factory or plant in which hundreds of men are employed. Whether he is just or unjust, there are many such stories, thrilling and tragic, enacted through this relation all over this country all the time. "The Work of Our Hands" is one of them. It throws new light on this old problem, while telling the story in such a way that it should be read for its own sake.

Back Home
By Eugene Wood. Illustrations by A. B. Frost. $1.50.
This is a book about you, when you lived in the little country town and went to Sunday school, or to the circus, or to the little country school, or swimming, and it tells you just how you feel now looking back on those things, which seem funnier than they did then. Yes, we have all been there. There is no one thing upon which we have so many common memories as our childhood, and "Back Home" takes us there until we realize that, after all, this is one great human family.

The Fortunes of The Landrays
By Vaughn Kester. Five illustrations by the Kinneys. $1.50.
Lots of action and lots of life, covering geographically all the country between the middle West and the far West, and in time those stirring periods between the discovery of gold in California in '49 and the growth of the boom towns in the West after the war. We all inherit household stories of this period in which our fathers and grandfathers took active part.

The Ancient Landmark
By Elizabeth Cherry Waltz, author of "Pa Gladden." $1.50.
Every one who has become acquainted with "Pa Gladden" will want to read this book by the same author. It is more of a novel than "Pa Gladden," but is just as strong in drawing real characters—people in whom you take a real, live, human interest, just as you do in your neighbors and friends.

I. N. R. I.; A Prisoner's Story of the Cross
By Peter Rosegger. Illustrated with eight pictures in colors drawn by Corwin Knapp Linson in the Holy Land. $1.50.
This is a life of Christ, simply written by a simple man, a carpenter, as Christ was. The author has written his book as one of the disciples would have written if he had expressed himself in the language of our day.

Told by Uncle Remus
By Joel Chandler Harris. Profusely illustrated with sixty pictures by A. B. Frost and others. Cloth, large 12mo. $2.00.
New stories of the old plantation. Brer Rabbit Again! There is a perfect treat in this book for old and young alike. Also Brer Fox, Brer Wolf, and all the others of the old friends of Uncle Remus, who appears once more after many years in Joel Chandler Harris's new book. No such animal stories have ever been told in modern times and Mr. Harris has been recognized as a modern Æsop.

A list of our books with a characterization of each will be mailed to any one anywhere, on request.

A RIVAL OF CONRAD.

Edward Noble's New Novel, "The Edge of Circumstance."*

EDWARD NOBLE'S new novel, "The Edge of Circumstance," will come to most readers as a first book by an unknown author, and their supposition or assumption is not so far from accuracy that anybody need impose much restraint on his wonder or hers at its many and unusual excellencies. And yet the appearance from unexpected places of books more or less "great" is a not infrequently observed phenomenon of the day—not less frequently observed than its converse. Names tried and proved in the literary world all too often are found signed to disappointing matter, but such nodding on the part of the gods can surely be looked upon with equanimity so long as it is possible to come all unawares upon such a moving and satisfying example of the story-teller's art as is this tale of the sea with its irritatingly uncommunicative title. Admirers of Mr. Joseph Conrad will not concede because of it that his laurels are yet in any immediate danger, but a would-be rival has certainly appeared in Mr. Conrad's own particular field of fiction, and "The Edge of Circumstance" gives many indications that Mr. Noble has come to stay and that there is much more good stuff where this story came from. At any rate, it is to be hoped there is and that there will be as little delay as possible in converting it into book form.

"The Edge of Circumstance" is a "sea story," but not at all one of the old-fashioned sort, in which the interest centred entirely in the number and size of the perils encountered by some ill-fated ship and her abnormally unfortunate crew. The sea and its dangers are here the background. The men who take part in the drama all have to do with the sea in some capacity, but the real story, which absorbs one's every faculty from the first page to the last of Mr. Noble's book, deals with the old, old subject of the human passions and the war of man against man. Incidentally there are included some pictures of the sea that are convincing enough in their realism to satisfy the most skeptical that the writer is describing such things as he himself has experienced and that he comprehends money loser instead of a money winner.

With some men in charge Arun could have carried out his purpose easily enough, and the Titan would have gone the way that so many ships have gone when well insured and of no further use to their owners, but Shirwill and McGrabbut were of different stuff—"knew too much," as Arun was wont angrily to remark when, as frequently happened, he and they collided in their intentions—and in spite of Arun's best efforts, the Titan survived unspeakable perils and came battered, but safely, into port. The story of how it was all accomplished is of enthralling interest. Shirwill and McGrabbut are marvels of character drawing, but the intricacies and complexities of Arun's denotement are little short of a masterpiece, and the ending of the struggle of wills between these three men is most satisfying in its artistic avoidance of the obvious.

Only the merest outline can here be given of Mr. Noble's story and no idea at all of its many striking and thrilling scenes, or of the clever talk with which its pages overflow. But it is a rarely good—even a great—book in some respects, and it seems destined to take high rank in the sea literature of its class.

THE REAL BOY.

LONELY O'MALLEY. A Story of Boy Life. By Arthur Stringer. Illustrated. 12mo. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

MR. STRINGER is versatile; a writer of good verse, with an earlier prose production of a strong psychological study to his credit, he has now written the entertaining story of the youthful adventures of Lonely O'Malley, that strange mixture of the young savage and angel which characterizes the real boy. Lonely, a corruption of his mother's family patronymic of Lomely, had his own pathetic story of how he came by that strange name. He hunched up his shoulder and squinted a little—"always an ominous sign to those who knew him."

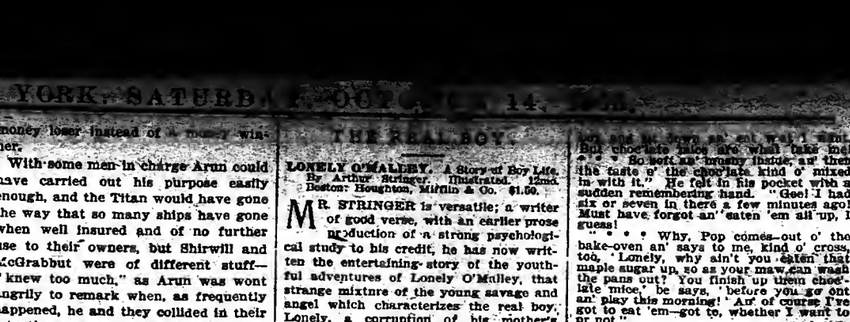
> "I was born twins, at first," he explained feelingly, "but the other one of us he up an' died, and left me all alone! * * * Then the doctor he wrapped me up in a blanket and he brung me over to maw, an' he put me in the bed next to her, an' he says, 'this lonely little fellow, you'll have him to look after.' An' maw she said, 'Poor lonely little fellow.' An' she says it kind o' stuck, that word, and so she just called me Lonely right along."

When Lonely saw red he murdered truth, and he saw red very often in the course of his young life. His father kept a bakeshop and he won easy laurels as a hero who was forced to lick out all the maple sugar pans and eat all left-over chocolate mice.

> "Why," proceeded Lonely, seeing red, * * * why, all I got to do is to take a bite and he says as sad as I will want. But chocolate mice are what take me! * * * So soft an' mushy inside, an' then the taste o' the chocolate kind o' mixed in with it." He felt in his pocket with a sudden remembering hand. "Geel I had six or seven in there a few minutes ago! Must have forgot an' eaten 'em all up, I guess!
>
> "* * * Why, Pop comes out o' the bake-oven an' says to me, kind o' cross, too, 'Lonely, why ain't you eaten that maple sugar up, so as your maw can wash the pans out? You finish up them chocolate mice,' he says, 'before you go out an' play this morning!' An' of course I've got to eat 'em—got to, whether I want to or not."
>
> "But, Lonely," interposed Annie Eliza, quite impersonally and innocently, "don't you ever feel like getting some one to help you?"
>
> "How d' you mean?"
>
> "Why, when he's mad about you're not doing them kind o' things fast enough!"
>
> "Nope," said Lonely. "Pop don't like folks 'round the shop."

But Lonely's triumph was short lived, for Annie Eliza and an intimate friend went into the shop one day to make penny purchases and heard Lonely in the back room begging in vain for a pan to lick.

We eagerly follow Lonely indefinitely through all his adventures, through his triumphs and his humiliations; through his doubts and his queer, strange, tortuous methods of reasoning; through his mad, imaginative wanderings from the narrow path of truth, and his wicked foraging of apple orchards and his killing of neighboring chickens, and—but the list grows and grows, and we are really sorry when at last Mr. Stringer leaves our ragged little hero standing a hero indeed—uneasy beneath the weight of the laurels thrust upon him.



UMBRIA.

ITALY is a most fertile theme for the book writers; and always, it would seem, is there a book ready to drop out of the blue Italian sky into the lap of whatever English writer will perform, well or ill, understandingly or not, the proper rites. Mr. Hutton has performed them, on the whole, well and understandingly. He is familiar with the Umbrian country; he loves it, has in a way penetrated into its spirit. His book is a rather curious compound of poetical rhapsody and eloquence, with guide-book explicitness. He has his fling, as most have, at that "mighty army of martyrs who are led about Italy by Baedeker", but we sometimes cannot escape from Baedekerism even between his covers. There is, however, so much more, and so much that is agreeably told, that perhaps he who wishes to shun the mighty army and escape martyrdom would very well intrust himself to Mr. Hutton's guidance.

Perugia, Assisi, are of course the first places to which he escorts us, and confides to us fragments of history and judgments of their paintings and churches and monuments, as well as something of the spirit of the places. Perugia stands above all the perfection of the landscape, "ever at attention on her hills, terrible of aspect with all her beauty, and with great angry eyes as of old, searching out her enemies." Of Assisi he writes:

> Hallowed by the tears and footsteps, sorrowful and bleeding, of many thousands of pilgrims, she has grown lovely under their love, beautiful in some exquisite Christian manner with the sorrows that the world has laid at her feet for hundreds of years now; a simple country virgin, very pure and innocent, who has had but one lover, Christ her Lord.

And of St. Francis and his memorials he also has much, of course, to say; but he enters his protest against the "enthusiastic sentimentality" of those who come to worship him without understanding him or his faith, and throws a brick at "the Protestant Frenchman who has made his fame out of this saint of the Catholic Church," which Mr. Sabatier may not find it necessary to dodge. Spello none should miss, save those who are desperate with hurry, and there may be seen the work of the great and exquisite sentimentalist, Pintoricchio. Through the other Umbrian cities Mr. Hutton takes us to Urbino at last.

The next chapters are devoted to a consideration of Umbrian art—an art that was for the most part a religious, vowed to God. Its two schools were those of Guhbio and Perugia, both the handmaid of the Church, touching life only rarely, having no life of its own apart from religion. In the section "Umbria Mystica" are discussed the saints who illumine the history of the district—Joachim di Fiore, the forerunner of St Francis; St. Francis himself, his friend St. Clare, Brothers Bernard and Elias. Now again he returns to M. Sabatier, who divined much in the fragmentary legend of Francis's life by his exquisite and loving care, his patient and profound scholarship, hut who yet discovered in him qualities of a revolutionary, a progressive reformer, an amiable Martin Luther, that Mr. Hutton thinks were not there. All this is a part of Umbria, and it is all necessary for him who would understand what Umbria means. The book has much that is useful and valuable as a contribution toward the understanding of the Italian life and spirit in their manifold manifestations, much that is suggestive, much that is concrete and firmly to be taken hold of.

The Vaudeville Artist.

The new novel by Mrs. Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, called "The Debtor," will be published in book form by the Harpers Oct. 19. The story deals with the cumulative misfortunes of Arthur Carroll, who, after being cheated out of his inheritance in his native South, comes North to better his fortunes. He lives with his family first in one New Jersey town and then in another, and in each makes only debts. His family live upon precarious credits. There are daughters involved, and these daughters have love affairs. But the feature of the story is the rehabilitation of Carroll by means of negro minstrelsy. Convinced that he is good for nothing else, he recovers his financial independence on the vaudeville stage. His family meantime (save one daughter) is exiled in Kentucky. As a psychological study Mrs. Freeman's story (which has already appeared serially) is said to be remarkably strong and interesting.

CUPID IN SPAIN.

THE TRAVELING THIRDS. By Gertrude Atherton. 12mo. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

MRS. ATHERTON'S latest story is as unlike her stories of "Senator North" and "The Conquerors" as is Mark Twain's humor unlike that of Carolyn Wells's. The writing of "The Traveling Thirds" was probably simply a relaxation from Mrs. Atherton's usually strenuous style. The Moultons, excellent middle-class suburbanites, have decided to tour the continent. Mr. Moulton, a kindly gentleman and a reader and literary adviser for a large publishing house, has a certain position to sustain. His daughters, Jane and Lydia, have spent their lives in a "literary atmosphere." Not among the giants of the profession, because these are always too busy to go to suburban house parties, but among the lesser lights that are trying to illuminate the world with their feeble candlepowers. Lydia, the younger daughter, having but lately passed the first quarter century post, yearns for the congeniality of an unliterary mind. Lydia is of a gold and white prettiness and is a bit of a flirt.

To join the party comes Catalina Shore, a product of the golden West. Frankly, we are disappointed in Catalina. Why should a writer of Mrs. Atherton's ability create so commonplace a heroine? Does not almost every lady of modern fiction carry her head like a Queen above the "white column of her throat"? Have not nearly all of them wonderful, unfathomable eyes of a strange mysterious beauty; hair of shimmering abundance, and a figure of tender youthful curves? Catalina, in spite of a far-off Indian ancestor, is much like other heroines of romance.

In Spain, where the party goes, romances crop up at once. Only one long-drawn-out one for Catalina, but the flirtatious Lydia's pale charms attract first a decadent nobleman and later a dusky peasant—a man with the impious name of Jesus Maria—a beautiful, passionate, and very annoying savage, who wants not only Lydia, but the money which he foolishly supposed the paternal Moulton possesses.

There are, of course, many adventures and a final quarrel between Catalina and her relatives—whereupon the relatives, including the much-sought Lydia, take passage for home at once and straightway fade out of the story. But Catalina stays on and finishes her romance.

A HERO IN DISGUISE.

THE SCARLET PIMPERNEL. By Baroness Orczy. 12mo. Illustrated. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

THIS is a thrilling story of the days of the French Revolution. It was first written as a play, and one can imagine it being better for acting purposes than for reading. "The Scarlet Pimpernel" was the name chosen to conceal the identity of a daring Englishman—the head of a brave band whose object was to aid members of the French nobility to escape the jaws of the guillotine. From the very first, of course, the reader recognizes the hero, although the author does not openly declare him until many pages later. Who, though, could mistake that mask of quiet indolence, of almost stupid indifference, of superhuman conrage? Sir Percy Blakeney goes to meet danger, perhaps death, as another man would run lightly down to breakfast. He langhs in the faces of his enemies and fastidiously removes imaginary specks of dust from his ruffles before giving the saving of his life even a thought. He is apparently indifferent to the fact that he has the handsomest and most courted wife in England, and she, thinking him the dunce he appears to be, diverts the affections that should have been his to Armand, her brother.

But when she discovers the hidden real self of Sir Percy, when by accident she finds that he has started on a perilous journey to save Armand for her—a journey which means certain death for himself—when he does this without even telling her of his intentions and leaves her to discover it all quite by accident, she clinches her tiny hands, looks more pathetically childlike than ever and starts out to warn and save him.

There are many exciting passages in this story of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," much kissing of Lady Blakeney's "tiny" hand, considerable cold-blooded villany, and of course a final scene of perfect understanding and ensuing bliss.

Mrs. Ward's New Novel.

Mrs. Humphry Ward's new novel, "Fenwick's Career," which appears serially in The Century, will, the Harpers announce, be published by them in book form at the end of its magazine course. Incidentally in this connection the same house, without saying that the figures are official, notes that Mrs. Ward's profits on "Lady Rose's Daughter" have been estimated at $150,000.

Three Modern Rulers.

"Makers of Modern History," by the Hon. Edward Cadogan, son of the former Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, is published in this country by James Pott & Co. The struggle between conservative principles and revolutionary forces constitutes the framework of the history of the nineteenth century. With this great movement are closely associated the names of Louis Napoleon, Cavour, and Bismarck, the subjects of the three essays included in this little volume. "We have made history," said Cavour upon a memorable occasion, "now let us go to dinner." It is on the epoch making, the history making, actions of these men that emphasis is here laid. Perhaps the fact most frequently illustrated in the careers of these three men is that Machiavellianism is apt to go hand in hand with statesmanship, and that in the conduct of nations Jesuitical principles are not obsolete.

The BLACK SPANIEL

By ROBERT HICHENS

Author of "THE GARDEN OF ALLAH," "THE WOMAN WITH THE FAN," "FELIX," Etc.

"The Black Spaniel," the long story that with several shorter ones makes up this volume, is as unusual and original as the novels Mr. Hichens has given us previously. Aside from its compelling appeal against vivisection, the story has as its theme a most curious and realistic psychological motive, growing out of the cruel treatment of a little dog, that baffles the reader and, even against his will, holds his attention to the last page.

A SERVANT of the PUBLIC

By ANTHONY HOPE

Author of "QUISANTÉ," "PHROSO," "THE PRISONER OF ZENDA," Etc.

In one week "A Servant of the Public" took its place among the successful novels of the year. Critics and readers agree that the author never has drawn a more bewildering, more fascinating character than Ora Pinsent.

THE BALLINGTONS.

An Uncommonly Original and Powerful New Novel by Frances Squire.*

IT must be confessed that when a novel by an unknown author comes into the hands of a reviewer he is likely to open it with the listless mental exclamation of "Yet another!" The most sated reader, however, cannot turn many pages of "The Ballingtons" without becoming aware that it is by no means "another," but distinctly itself, a book of striking originality and power, and of intense human interest.

It has a double drama in the lives of two married pairs, in one of which the husband holds the purse, in the other the wife. In the one financial despotism makes the situation insupportable, in the other the wife's refusal to recognize her husband's manly resolution to be independent. The tyranny of withholding and the tyranny of giving are set in contrast. The interest of the story centres in the former pair, the latter being just a little melodramatic, and more slightly sketched than the former. We have rarely seen a picture more accurate in detail, more logical in consequences, more true in all its coloring, more subtle in every "nuance" than this of the wedded life of Ferdinand and Agnes Ballington. The writer has felt and thought deeply, with the result of a wonderfully true presentation of marriage under certain conditions, and of the inevitable effect upon a woman's character. Each step, from the early romance through the gradual disillusion to the ultimate tragedy, is taken in strict accord with "the logic of events."

There is never a point where the author swerves from absolute truth. She shows her fidelity to life and the courage of her fidelity by making the issue between husband and wife—or, rather, between husbands and wives—a practical, not merely an emotional one. Only very young people analyze, compare, exploit their emotions, and find love shipwrecked when they clash. The real murderers of love are the brutal frankness of speech, the financial jarrings, the differences of opinion in regard to the management of household or of children, the discovery of pettiness or of meanness, revealed, perhaps slowly, by the years of married intimacy and interdependence—and these are the murderers Mrs. Squire employs At the same time she does not falter in her ethical loyalties, and her profound conception of the sanctity of marriage. Moreover, although Ferdinand stirs our souls with the same helpless rage Grandcourt was wont to arouse, although Agnes claims a deeper compassion than Gwendolen commanded, although Fred and Beatrice seem to have made a hopeless mess of their lives, although we fear nothing is left for Tom and Miriam but a life-long illustration of Jean Ingelow's "Divided," such is the author's art and humor that the book is scarcely very soon, probably before the author's return from Europe. It will be illustrated in color.

THE LIFE OF A WORKING GIRL.

THE LONG DAY. The True Story of a New York Working Girl as Told by Herself. 12mo. New York: The Century Company. $1.20 net.

THIS is the story of the hardships, the trials, and the endless temptations and pitfalls that beset an honest girl anxious to earn a decent living among the denizens of the overcrowded working class in a large city. The woman who tells her own story is terribly in earnest about it all. She came here with scarcely anything in her slim purse, eager and anxious to work. In the little country town in which she had lived and taught school she longed for the broader avenues for her ambition that an imagination fed on happy magazine stories of self-supporting women in a big city pictured to her. When she was finally left alone without any near relatives in the town where she had lived, she decided to start at once toward the golden city of her dreams.

Just how hard it is for a girl with only an ordinary education and no experience to speak of in any line of work to get something to do she learned in a short time. At first she thought to pick and choose at a profession, but soon it was a matter of taking what she could get, and thanking a bountiful Heaven for that.

She tells of experiences in many factories, of the endless drudgeries of it all, the horrible conditions that goad the girls on to moral depravity and make them mental and physical wrecks; of the kindnesses of her mates, of her "lady friends" and their "gentleman friends," and many other things. For many months she fought against starvation and the things that are worse than starvation before she finally worked her way to the surface and became a member of the grade of high-class and respected business women.

In spite of the fact that much of the things she tells are things that most of us know and shut our eyes to—although it has many times been told before by women like Marie Van Vorst and others, who have studied the conditions from practical experiences—this story of "The Long Day" will undoubtedly be read with surprise by many, and perhaps doubted by not a few.

QUEBEC.

A Book By James Douglas on Old France in the New World.*

THE study of the French occupation of Canada, the explorations under the remarkable men who penterated far into tbe wilds, and the struggle with England for the supremacy has been scalously pursued in recent years. Mr. Douglas adds n very substanthal and comprehensive volume to the literature of the subject. He has derived his facts and opinions, be declares, from original sources, though he bas bad no access to unpublished documents. He carries his account down to tbe close of the seventeenth century, the end of tbe "heroic period" of Canadian history. He begins it with the voyages of Cartier, in 1534 and after; Raberval's futile attempts at colonization in 1543, and the "dark age" of Canadian history whicb followed, up to Champlain's foundation of Quebec in 1608. Then began the real history of Canada.

From now on Dr. Douglas relates the sequence of events with great detail. Trading was the primary motive of the French colonization schemes, and "a sincere, though not very ardent, desire to Christianize the Indians." The King's professed object was the conversion of the savages; but there bad been complications from the succession of Huguenot and Catbolic influences. He holds a fair balnnce between them. He has words of admiration for the Jesuit missionaries, while he is not blind to all the bearings of their activities. Thus, of the "Jesuit Relations," he says that they were "manifestly written with the triple object of magnifying the missionary work of the Society of Jesus, soliciting subscriptions for their great schemes, and glorifying the colonization efforts nnd the religious motives of the company of One Hundred Associates and its officers."

It was a pious community in Qucbec, and whatever heretics were landed from time to time were unable to withstand the arguments of the priests and the pressure of public opinion. No one remained long who questioned the authority of the Church. Tbere was even greater and more perfect religious unanimity tban in the Puritan colonies of New England, but the music and color and dramatically effective details of the altar service appealed more to the senses of the Indians than anything the Puritans could offer tbem. Primitive Roman Catholicism has, in fact, retained its influence over the French in Lower Canada more effectively than Puritanism in its primitive form has maintained its hold on the people of New Englnnd.

The sluggishness of Canadian development as compared with that of New England or Louisiana is the subject of some interesting conjectures. No one reason suffices to explain it; rigid bureaucracy, trade monopoly, ultramontanism in religion, made the colony unpopular in France. Furthermore, Frenchmen were as unwilling to leave France in the eighteenth century as they are in ths twentieth. Dr. Douglas hazards the suggestion that had Canada been a refuge for Huguenots, as New England was for Puritans, and had the home Government not interfered in the development of the country there might have been a new nationality created in the Western world wbich, retaining Gallic characteristics, would have developed a type of national existence as different from that of old France as the New Englend type now is from that of old England. But Canada, it must be remembered, lacked New England's splendid opportunities for commerce.

One of the most important features of the book are its illustrations. There are many reproductions of old pictures, maps, diagrams, and portraits, almost always excellent. There are also numerous photographic views of places as they appear to-day in illustrations of points treated in the text. The important chapter on "Quebec as it appeared at the end of tho eighteenth century" is full of sucb views and of reproductions of old drawings. In fact, though Dr. Dougins has trod in paths that had been pretty well blazed out and explored before him, he has achieved a work of value.

American Political History--1763-1876

OLD GREEK.

A Memoir of Edward North, an Old-Fashioned Professor in an Old-Fashioned College.*

"OLD GREEK" was the affectionate nickname of Edward North, for fifty-eight years Professor of Greek in Hamilton College. He resigned in 1901, and survived his resignation only two years. His professorship of fifty-eight years is "as long a period" as any similar service in the same chair in any American college or university—the editor of this book is not prepared to say it is the longest. None the less, it is long enough to be memorable. This volume is an affectionate and enthusiastic memorial of a well beloved and admired friend and teacher. It is not a critical biography of an American scholar, nor an estimate of his place in American scholarship. It has all the overflowing zeal and loyal enthusiasm of the "small college" for its great men, whose personal influence is the chief stock in trade of the small college; it celebrates the potency of the small college and of that influence; mourns the modern conditions of American university life; appeals for the restoration of the classics to the exclusive place to which modern methods have questioned their right. According to the editor, the volume carries a message of momentous import to the American teacher, in indicating the sources of the teacher's personal power over his pupils.

Whether or not its message is generally found so momentous, the volume will be a most agreeable one to alumni of the college and pupils of Prof. North. It gives a full sketch of his career, which involves many reminiscences of the elder days at the college, old customs and the old life. There follow numerous chapters concerning special features of his work. One relates to his sojourn in Greece in 1871-2; there are a detailed account of his services to his college, some reminiscences and anecdotes from college history, an analysis of Prof. North's methods, power, and achievements as a teacher, his qualifications as a Greek scholar and as a writer and lecturer, his views as n spelling reformer and as a lover of nature. He was a fluent versifier, and seems to have been in communion with the muse at frequent intervals. Many of the results are given; they are often pleasing, sometimes clever; but that they rarely rise to the level of poetry need not be a matter for surprise. He was a frequent lecturer and essayist

Glaze. The volume is bound in limp lambskin. The other book is in the series of Great Writers, and deals with Charles Lamb. It is written by Walter Jerrold, and, after giving a brief account of Elia's life, he considers his principal writings, divided into several groups, including Lamb's poetry, dramatic writings, stories, critical pieces, essays, and letters. The illustrations include a coupic of portraits of Lamb and some views of Christ's Hospital, as well as a fac simile of a letter by Lamb to John Clare, the "Peasant Poet."

MYRTLE REED'S BOOK.

AT THE SIGN OF THE JACK-O'-LANTERN. By Myrtle Reed. One volume. Pp. 353. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50. Also fine bindings for the holiday trade.

AT the Sign of the Jack-o'-Lantern" is the alluring title under which Myrtle Reed includes a curious mixture of solemn moral lessons, ponderous dissertations on the pursuit of literature as a profession, and a main theme which is the broadest kind of farce. She works these three seemingly incompatible elements fairly well together, but it is quite certain that it will be the exceptional reader who will not be inclined to skip the serious parts of the book in order to arrive more speedily at the amusing events which went on at the "Jack-o'-Lantern." In these events, be it said, probability and reason take absolutely no part, but absurdity is added to absurdity and impossibility to impossibility after a fashion more characteristic of comic opera than anything else, and the result is just about as satisfying mental food. However, Miss Reed is mistress of a delicacy of thought and style which lends itself gracefully to the light and airy exaggeration of human foibles, and most of her funmaking is very provocative of that quiet kind of chuckling on the reader's part which is sure proof of a pretty humor in the writer. Such touches as the naming of a cow Maud because she insisted upon going into the garden may not be a mark of the most intellectual kind of wit, but it savors so strongly of the home variety as to be immensely appealing to the risibilities.

"At the Sign of the Jack-o'-Lantern" is partly a study in the troublous processes by which the honeymoons of inexperienced young couples gradually merge into the quietudes of congenial married life and partly a frankly farcical tale of the adventures that befell a New York newspaper man and his bride when they tried to live in a queer old heirloom of a house bequeathed to them by an eccentric uncle. The uncle's life had been made so wretched by the visits of a numerous band of mercenary relatives that he had finally hit on the plan of accommodating the several families who insisted on spending their Summers with him by adding individual wings to the original house and further increasing the usefulness of these by outside stairways and kitchens. The peculiar arrangement

FAIR PROVENCE.

Mr. Cook's Generous Heaps of Information About the Famous French County.*

MR. COOK'S two volumes on Old Provence are those of a a man who knows his subject thoroughly. Unfortunately, he does not know how to handle his knowledge. His books are a mass of valuable matter, roughly piled in separate heaps. What is in the heaps is all good, but not all equally good, and the attempt at the arrangement of material is only partial. The result is a work containing much of interest and importance, and little that is trivial in itself; yet all so badly arranged that the reader has to pick and choose to find what he wants. He will not find it elsewhere, however, at all events in English; so he must give thanks for the index in each volume.

The first volume deals with Provence under the Greeks and Romans. Mr. Cook writes entertainingly of the traces of Marius in Provence. He follows his march, camp by camp, through the country until he met the Teutons and the Ambrons on the bank of the Lar—never mind when; Mr. Cook does not. For nearly eighteen centuries, until 1793, the villagers of Pertuis on each 24th of April (the traditional date of the battle) used to go in procession to the Hill of Victory, singing and dancing; and in the morning the Curé of Vauvenargues celebrated mass. In other ways, too, as Mr. Cook points out, Marius has become almost the patron saint of a part of Provence. Three statues at Les Baux, originally effigies of Marius, his wife, Julia, and his attendant prophetess, Martha the Syrian, have been metamorphosed into images of "Les Trois Maries"—the Virgin, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the Sister of Lazarus! Marius himself disappears in the change. Around his victory over the barbarians and the historical facts which attended it have been built up a mass of beautiful and harmless legends.

I know few villages more beautiful for a week's sojourn in April than is St. Remy. The village girls, in the beautiful costume of Arles, are like the maidens of Tanagra come back to earth again. The streets are avenues of plane-trees, garlanded with delicate little hanging balls of flower. The scent of roses and syringa is in all the air.

Nostradamus is the most famous child of this beautiful place; and Mr. Cook continues his digression from the account of Roman Provence to tell us about that famous adept in the black art. In time, however, we get back to Augustus and his successors and, in a note, hear about Greek and Roman traveling theatrical companies and brotherhoods of actors, one of which was established at Arles, in Provence; they lasted until the sixth century, when ecclesiasticism ended their existence. Writing of the famous Maison Carrée at Nimes, Mr. Cook says:

> It is just its subtle divergencies from mathematical exactness which makes the Parthenon so beautiful and so unapproachable. It is just because the Madeleine in Paris is a strictly mathematical enlargement of the Maison Carrée that the modern building is so dull and unsuccessful.

This fact leads into a discussion of the principles of Greek architecture, involving delicate differences, curves in construction, intentional deviations from exactness—with a sudden return to the history of the Maison Carrée. This was not a temple to Caesar, says Mr. Cook. It was the Hôtel de Ville from about 1050 to 1540; then a private house, then a stable; in 1672 it became a church, but in 1789 was turned into a granary and market. In 1823 it was made a museum, and is now under the care of the Stats. Discussing the distribution of "panem et circences" through Provence, Mr. Cook tells of shows lasting three days and nights; "there was scarcely any pause between one item of the entertainment and the next." Evidently these were the original continuous performances. A short consideration of the relative merits of modern football and ancient gladiatorial games is ended by Mr. Cook with a decision favorable to the latter.

Volume II. of the account of Provence is no less discursive than the first, and no less interesting in the same discursive way. It covers the period from about the time of Charlemagne, say, 900 A. D., to the death of the good King Réné in 1480, with excursions back to Greek, Roman, and Teutonic days and forward to modern times. It opens with a description of what the author calls the Alyscamps—he is not consistent in his use of French and English names—the "Necropolis of Gaul." Originally the "Campi Elysii" of Arles, it is now a long road, flanked by tombs; in the twelfth century, Mr. Cook writes, "it was sufficient to place the corpse in a rude coffin fashioned like a barrel and commit it to the Rhone, which brought its quiet charge in safety to the beach of La Roquette," and there probably some one buried it. The plagues at Arles down to 1721 are also described.

The chapter on Réné, the good King of Sicily, Naples, and Aragon, Count of Provence, Duke of Bar, Lorraine, and Anjou—honorary titles, most of them—discusses at some length the troubadours and their influence on French manners; Petrarch and Laura, who was a Provençal; Aucassin and Nicolete, and, almost incidentally, King Réné himself. Reading the two volumes one is impressed by an overpowering sense of ill-arranged knowledge. Mr. Cook knows his subject, but his discursiveness becomes wearisome, his information weighty and hard to bear. These volumes on Provence are more endurable than his book on Rouen, which simply is dull. They ought to be far better than they are, however.

We have noted the value of the index in each volume; it must be remarked that there is no map of any value in either, and that the author expects the reader to know what he calls "the lie of the land," without the adventitious assistance of geography.

*OLD PROVENCE. By Theodore Andrea Cook, M. A., F. S. A. Portrait, maps, and illustrations. Two volumes. Vol. I. Pp. xxiii.-348. Vol. II. Pp. xiii.-445. 8vo. Cloth. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.

VENICE FROM WITHIN.

IN AND AROUND VENICE. By Horatio F. Brown. Illustrations. 8vo. Pp. ii.-213. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

MR. BROWN is right in saying that Venice has not yet been written out. His book is proof of the correctness of his statement, so far as it is concerned; what yet remains to be told we do not know. He says, however, that the city is inexhaustible.

The book is a collection of essays on various sides of Venetian life, evincing great knowledge of the place and its people, put together in no particular order, but all connected because they have to do with Venice. In the introductory chapter occurs a typical digression. Talking of the comfort of traveling in a gondola, Mr. Brown remarks that one ought to visit the squero where gondolas are built; then he launches into a description of the building of a gondola that shows he has followed his own advice, and spent more than one morning at the boat yard. Later the author takes us to Torcello, and indulges us in a storm as he brings us back to the city. Of the Venetian people he remarks, apropos of the statement that few crowds are more cheerful or better ordered than a Venetian crowd:

> As a rule the popolo is the lightest and most easygoing in the world. Indeed, this carelessness is a characteristic of the race in general. The writer once had the misfortune to be a witness before the Pretore. His fellow-witness was an old woman in a thick flannel petticoat. After nearly waiting in the anteroom, where every one was smoking, we were summoned into court and lectured on the nature of an oath. While this was going on one of the policemen said to the old woman, "You're burning," but he never moved; and sure enough a thin thread of smoke was rising from the old lady's petticoat. "Santissima Maria Vergine!" she cried; but no one moved. The Judge put his finger tips together and confirmed the policeman's remark, "Yes, you're burning," and prosecutor, counsel, and public confirmed the Judge, "Yes, she's burning." The old lady's fellow witness could not let her burn quite quietly, so he caught her petticoats in his hands, while the Judge, still with his finger tips together, nodded approval and said, "Squeeze her, squeeze her well." The smoldering flame was soon put out. The Judge smiled, the policeman smiled, the public smiled, and the case went on.

Mr. Brown is afraid that the Campanile will not be the last Venetian tower to fall, though he does not point out what he thinks will go next. Several chapters are devoted to the Campanile and its fall and to the restoration of the column of St. Mark and the Theodore column. This last piece of work seems to have been a very pretty piece of engineering. The famous lion of St. Mark, Mr. Brown says, was made up of a head, body, and legs from an Assyrian palace, wings and paws of much later date, while the tail is only about a hundred years old. A chapter on Venetian door knockers is extremely interesting; so is one on the Giustiniani, who, besides being Venetian nobles, are peers of Scotland—surely a joke on Fortune's part. "Piles and pile driving" forms an interesting chapter, in which the author preserves, with translations, three of the songs which the men of the pile drivers sing as they hoist and drop the weights. The book, in fact, is full of all sorts of information about Venice—architectural, such as Ruskin liked; such as Hare would have given, (did give, for that matter,) and also information that neither of them gave. The book might be called "Venice Intime"—there is no English equivalent for the expression. If the publishers had provided an index, or even a table of contents, its value, already considerable, would have been enhanced greatly. As it is, they have done all in their power to make the book a failure.

Boswell in a Single Volume.

With modern thin paper to work upon the publishers of to-day have become veritable thaumaturgists. Henry Frowde of the Oxford University Press reduces Boswell's Johnson from four to two volumes, and those to a single volume—of a size that the old doctor approved, too, one "that you may carry to the fire and hold readily in your hand," in spite of its nearly 1,400 pages. The edition followed is that of Malone, first published in 1790; the type is large and legible, the paper sufficiently opaque, the book wholly convenient.

BOSTON NOTES.

A New Book by Alice Brown—Other New Publications and Some Juveniles.

THAT much enduring man who searches in vain for a story novel in anything but nains should be content when Miss Alice Brown's "Paradise" shall come to him next Wednesday, for, without exception, all its personages are oddities. It tells of husbands and wives imprisoned in the narrow round of New England village life, until strangely cramped and contorted of aspect; of a widower dwelling in solitary state, literally working out his own salvation by keeping house with immaculate neatness and obeying all rules of Christian conduct with fierce determination not to be defrauded of his heavenly reward; of grim, silent young farmers; of a Magdalen who returns and compels her first lover, an entirely blameless youth, to marry her, and stranger than all, of the elfin heroine with no spiritual anchorage anywhere, but eager for opportunities to be kind and to impart her faith in divine goodness.

"Her Letter," of which a second edition became necessary three days ago to fill orders; Col. Higginson's "Part of a Man's Life," with its portraits and autograph fac similes, and "The England and Holland of the Pilgrims," also come from Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. next Wednesday. The last book, left in its first rough draft by the late Dr. Henry M. Dexter, was completed after his death in 1890 by Prof. Dexter of Yale, and has now been rewritten and edited by the author's son, Mr. Morton Dexter. It contains much material newly drawn from the records of Leyden and Amsterdam, and never before published. The limited Riverside Press "Sentimental Journey" and the single volume edition of "The Sentimental Journey" are also set down for Wednesday.

Lafcadio Hearn's "The Romance of the Milky Way" contains his criticism of Herbert Spencer's "The Ultimate Question," a paper in which he gives his own views on the topic meditated by Spencer. The title essay compares the Japanese mythology of the heavens and the astronomer's view, and the remaining papers touch upon poetry, goblin lore, and other matters of which Mr. Hearn had an inexhaustible store of knowledge. His enlightening "Letter from Japan," originally published in The Atlantic, is reprinted in this book.

***

Mr. Richard G. Badger has in press a volume of poetry by Miss Blanche Shoemaker, entitled "The Song of Youth," and having the author's portrait by Mr. Hellen for its frontispiece. "Cherokee Rose," by Miss Zitella Cocke; "Myrtle and Myrrh," by Ameen Rihani; "Actions by Miss Anna C. Tomlinson, and, as they are printed in four colors and no design is repeated, the book is artistically interesting.

***

Two or three controversial novels about mediums and their professions have recently appeared, but Mr. Francis Newton Thorpe's "The Divining Rod," to be published by Messrs. Little, Brown, & Co., differs from them in describing a family of Spiritualists, without expressing any opinion as to their belief. For the rest the book tells of an oil king and his clumsy efforts to spend his wealth, of his fight with his organized rivals, and of his beautiful daughter and her lovers.

***

By an uncommonly happy chance the two volumes of Capt. Mahan's "Sea Power in Its Relations to the War of 1812" will appear Saturday of next week, the centenary of Trafalgar, on which date he is to lecture in Boston. Its appearance in magazine form has made it familiar to those interested in its subject, and certain maps and plans added to the original illustrations will give it greater value.

***

To-morrow will bring Mr. Charles Ferris Gettemy's "The True Story of Paul Revere," Miss Annie Payson Call's "A Man of the World," and Miss Anna Chapin Ray's "Sidney: Her Summer on the St. Lawrence," the first of a new series, for there are to be no more "Teddy" books.

***

Miss M. Aliette Ayer's "The Joys of Friendship," the companion volume of her "Daily Cheer Year Book," is arranged by subjects, "The Love of Friendship," "Companionship," "Sympathy," "Influence," "Immortality of Friendship," and lastly "The Divine Friendship." A few of the quotations are from the work of great writers, and many are anonymous, but, on the other hand, very few are hackneyed, and one may open the book almost anywhere with the assurance of finding something unfamiliar. The book has an appropriate dress of white cloth decorated with a heart outlined in forget-me-nots, and it bears the imprint of Messrs. Lee & Shepard.

***

Two Stratemeyer books will come to the boys from the same house to-morrow, "The Fort in the Wilderness," in the Colonial Series, and "Dave Porter of Oak Hall" in the Dave Porter series. The former continues the story of Pontiac describing the siege of Detroit and the attack on Fort Pitt, and ending with the battle of Bushy Run. The hero of the latter book is a poorhouse boy, who, having earned an education by an act of bravery, goes to an academy frequented by the sons of wealthy men, shines in the classroom, and attains to great glory as a baseball player. His only fault is his abject cowardice in regard to the future tense. He never says "shall" for "will," or "will" for "shall," for he dares not trust himself with either, but makes sentences like "I hope he doesn't die with the secret," "I trust I don't have any of its roseate atmosphere. The book is prettily illustrated by Miss Ethelred B. Barry and has a tasteful illuminated cover. It is published by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co.

STEPHENSON BROWNE.

Boston, Oct. 13, 1905.

HARNACK ON CHRISTIANITY.

THE EXPANSION OF CHRISTIANITY IN THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES. By Adolf Harnack, Professor of Church History in the University of Berlin. Translated and edited by James Moffatt, D. D. Volume II. Pp. ix.-452. 8vo. cloth. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3 net.

THE second and final volume of Dr. Moffatt's translation of Harnack's "Expansion of Christianity in the First Three Centuries" is now published. This contains the concluding chapters of the third book of the original and the whole of the fourth book. The subject of course is interesting; the treatment is not, except to those who dig deeply into theology. Yet there are oases of interest in the volume—the "excursus" upon Christian names, for example. In this Harnack shows that down to the middle of the fourth century Peter and Paul are about the only New Testament names to be met with, while Old Testament names are very rare indeed. "As the saints, prophets, patriarchs, angels, &c., henceforth took the place of the dethroned gods of paganism, and as the stories of these gods were transformed into stories of the saints, the supersession of mythological names now commenced in real earnest." Saints' names were given to children, as Theodoret, Bishop of Cyprus, in Syria, explained, to win for them the protection and patronage of these heroes. "The result was a selection of names, varying with the different countries and provinces. * * * Withal, haphazard and freedom of choice always played some part in the choice of a name. The Western Church was very backward in adopting Old Testament names, and this continued until the advent of Calvinism."

Race Power in Literature.

The essays on this theme, which were delivered by Prof. George Edward Woodberry at the Lowell Institute in Boston, have been gathered into a volume under the title, "The Torch," and will be published in a few days by McClure, Phillips & Co. The author brings out, in his accounts of the great writers of the world and comparisons of them, the idea that, as each race reaches the climax of its power and dies, it passes on its inheritance of literature to some other race that has risen to be the torch-bearer. Prof. Woodberry writes in his opening chapter:

> It belongs to a highly developed race to become, in a true sense, aristocratic—a treasury of its best in practical and spiritual types, and then to disappear in the surrounding tides of men. So Athens dissolved like a pearl in the cup of the Mediterranean, and Rome in the cup of Europe, and Judea in the cup of the Universal Communion. Though death is the law of all life, man touches this earthen fact with the wand of the spirit and having now been taken over by the Francis D. Tandy Company, will appear in a new and enlarged form. It will be based on the earlier work, and will include a general introduction by Richard Watson Gilder besides several other introductions by other eminent men.

The new material includes the Rebecca letters leading up to the duel with Shields, some of Lincoln's early poems, many important letters to statesmen and Generals, numerous personal letters which have never before been printed, official letters to his Cabinet, a notable epistle to Major Gen. Hunter, a large number of telegrams during the civil war, early law arguments, legal opinions, and new letters to Gens. Halleck, McClellan, and Meade.

The illustrations will number about 100, and among them will be portraits and engravings of Lincoln by Carpenter, Thomas Johnson, Brady, Bartain; pictures of Lincoln's Cabinet and of the civil war Generals; the St. Gaudens monument of the Martyr President, the statue of Lincoln in Florence, Italy, and fac similes of the first draft and the final revision of the Gettysburg address, the letter to Mrs. Bixby written during the troublous times in 1864, the Emancipation Proclamation, and other important documents.

What God Hath (Not) Joined.

Out of a host of novels issued this year here is one that does more than simply ask for your attention. It demands it. The author of "WHAT GOD HATH (NOT) JOINED" has written a story so powerful that the tongues and pens of the Clergy, Lawyers, Doctors, and Society folk as well will not cease talking and writing about it.

CONDEMNED? Certainly. Did you ever know of a really powerful presentation of naked facts on such an important subject as Divorce go unanswered?

ABOUT AUTHORS.

What Some of Them Are Writing, Planning, and Doing.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has written an introduction for the Federal Edition of the Writings of Abraham Lincoln," which Arthur Brooks Lapsley is editing, and which will be published by the subscription department of G. P. Putnam's Sons. The President has also finished correcting the proofs of his new book, "Outdoor Pastimes of an American Hunter," which Charles Scribner's Sons will issue at the end of the month. It is a record of Mr. Roosevelt's hunting trips in recent years. It includes accounts of his latest bear hunt in Colorado and wolf hunt in Oklahoma, his Yellowstone Park trip in 1903, and his cougar and bobcat hunt in Colorado in 1901. In a chapter entitled "At Home" are described the resources and diversions of a lover of animals and family pets. The illustrations in the book are from photographs.

Prof. S. J. Holmes of the University of Wisconsin has written a volume on "The Biology of the Frog," which the Macmillan Company will publish shortly. The author's object is to give the whole life history of the frog, and he treats at length of the habits and natural history of the animal.

The authors of "My Friend the Chauffeur," "The Princess Passes," and "The Lightning Conductor," Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Williamson, spent last Summer making a tour of the canals of Holland in a motorboat. The result of this holidaying will probably be a new twist to their next work, and it is expected that pretty soon the announcement will be made of a romance of a motorboat from their pens.

FITZGERALD MOLLOY, author of "The Sailor King," "The Queen's Comrade," and other books dealing with royalties, describes in his latest two-volume work, bearing the imprint of Dodd, Mead & Co., the histories of four royal personages, all of whom were living and in Europe a few years ago. Under the title, "The Romance of Royalty," he deals with the lives of Ludwig II. of Bavaria, the Duchesse d'Alençon, Isabel II. of Spain, and the Empress Eugénie. The books are fully illustrated.

Emma B. Miles has spent her entire life in the heart of the Tennessee mountains, whose inhabitants she describes in her book, "The Spirit of the Mountains," which James Pott & Co. announce for Oct. 21. She tells all about the actual everyday life of the mountaineer, his traditions, his literature, and his music.

Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin has just returned to this city from her Summer home at Hollis, Me. "Rose o' the River," her latest story, is reported to be in its fifty-fifth thousand and "lasts d—quick," according to a buyer for the largest department store in Portland, Me., who recently ordered a large number of copies of the book.

***

JAMES EUGENE FARMER, whose "Versailles and the Court Under Louis XIV." is in active preparation by the Century Company, is Master in History and English Literature at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H. He has always been a student of French history, and spent much time in Paris and Versailles getting together material for his book.

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, author of "The Harvest of the Sea" and hero of Duncan's "Dr. Grenfell's Parish," entertained a number of well-known people this Summer at his Labrador home. Among his visitors were Elihu Root and Col. Sanger William R. Moody, Dr. Mackenzie of Cambridge, and Prof. Moore of Harvard. For several weeks he entertained the Governor General of Newfoundland and his party, who visited Labrador in an effort to come to some understanding about the boundary between Canadian and Newfoundland jurisdiction over the coast.

Miss Esther Singleton, who has been traveling in Europe all Summer, will return to this city this month. Her new book, "Great Portraits Described by Great Writers," has just been published by Dodd, Mead & Co.

Clarence L. Brownell is collecting first-hand material and absorbing local color in California for a novel dealing with that section, where he has just taken to agricultural pursuits, and is working out the problems of the simple life on a fruit ranch. He will be recalled as the author of "The Heart of Japan." One of the various experiences during his career has been a five years' stay in the Flowery Kingdom as a teacher of English in the national schools.

***

HELEN PETKIN, author of "An Angel by Brevet," published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, is at work on a new novel. It is to be a love story, with the scenes laid in the South.

James Huneker, whose volume of stories of the artistic temperament, "Visionaries," is published by Charles Scribner's Sons to-day, is in Italy making researches for his biography of Liszt. The book is expected to be ready for the publishers in about a year from now. On a post card from Sorrento dated Sept. 22, received by the Scribners a few days ago, Mr. Huneker writes: "In the earthquake here, but still survive. Swimming fine; heat terrific. Off to Rome next week."

L. Frank Baum, writer of fairy tales and extravaganzas, has just returned to Chicago from his Summer home at Macatawa, Mich., to revise a book written at the latter place, down for early issue in 1906, and to complete some short stories for magazines. About the first of the year he is to sail from New York for Italy. He will be there four or five months, living most of the time at Sorrento.

The Baroness Orczy, author of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," just now appearing with the Putnam imprint, says that, before attempting to describe a love scene, she first "steeps" herself in some of her favorite poets—"Swinburne pre-eminently, Tennyson, Heine, or that exquisite Persian poet, Mirza-Schaffy, have I find, a most inspiring effect for writing passages of sentiment, while for describing a romantic scene Victor Hugo is like manna in the wilderness." Another favorite author of hers is Bret Harte.

Prof. X. Koenig makes an attempt in his work on "Bible History," to come from McClure, Phillips & Co. during the Fall, to make the Bible known and loved again by those Protestant Christians who have neglected it because of a loss of faith in the old conceptions of it. He writes from the point of view of modern religious thought.

CHARLES F. LUMMIS writes in his story of the curiosities and romance of "Pioneer Transportation in America," now running in McClure's Magazine, from experience, having traversed the routes of all the streams he describes either on foot or horseback. Leisurely wandering for many years, Mr. Lummis has explored America from Canada to Chile. In 143 days, about twenty years ago, he traversed the Santa Fé trail, going on foot from Cincinnati to California, which is about 3,507 miles.

Miss Katharine M. Abbot, author of "Old Paths and Legends of New England," published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, is writing a similar book, which she says is nearly completed. Speaking of her experiences in collecting material Miss Abbot says: "The charm of travel over the picturesque old paths of New England is deepened on meeting along the wayside the true New Englander's courtesy and hospitality, after the old high-bred fashion. * * * He throws open wide his farmhouse door."

While Eugene P. Lyle, Jr., was making investigations for The World's Work he had some adventures. He spent some time in Venezuela, and, after leaving the country, was dogged for weeks by an emissary of President Castro, who thought he was a spy in the employ of the revolutionists. He spent four months in the West Indies, and has just returned to the city.

Prof. Sidney A. Reeve, in his book on "The Cost of Competition," to be brought out shortly by McClure, Phillips & Co., shows how the producer can reap the rewards of his labor as well as the trader, and he suggests the substitution of barter for the present method of exchange through the employment of money in commerce.

Anna Katharine Green, (Mrs. Charles Rohlfs,) a new edition of whose "The Leavenworth Case" is being issued by G. P. Putnam's Sons, began her literary career with poetry, a volume of which, "The Defense of the Bride, and Other Poems," published a few years ago, may be remembered. It deals chiefly with romantic incidents.

***

ARTHUR STRINGER, author of "Lonely O'Malley," now coming from the press of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., spends his Summers on his Lake Erie fruit farm and his Winters in New York or abroad, engaged in literary work. He is said to possess a very remarkable writing desk. It is made entirely from the oak and pine of a wrecked schooner washed ashore on the north coast of Lake Erie. A part of the vessel's deck, worn smooth by time and water, was kept intact, and now serves for the top of the writing table, while four of the old oak ribs have been turned into table legs.

Cale Young Rice, author of the dramatic poems "Charles di Tocca" and "David," bearing the imprint of McClure, Phillips & Co., has taken an executive position in a bank which he has helped to form in Louisville, Ky.

G. Waldo Browne, whose "The St. Lawrence River" was recently put out by the Putnams, unlike other tourists of the river, found as much delight in "climbing the rapids" from Montreal to Prescott as "running" them. While upon one of these upward trips he noted that out of forty passengers there were a dozen bridal couples on the boat.

The late Mrs. Elizabeth Cherry Waltz, author of the Pa Gladden stories, had planned, before her death, to write a series of novels about Kentucky rural life. The first, "The Ancient Landmark," which McClure, Phillips & Co. have just published, and which was reviewed in THE BOOK REVIEW last week, was the only one completed. What is believed to be the last bit from her pen is a tale in one of the magazines, "A Lady of Balance." For many years Mrs. Waltz was prominent in newspaper work.

Mrs. Caroline M. Morse is arranging to present copies of her "Memoirs of Jane Cunningham Croly," published by the Putnams under the auspices of the Women's Press Club of this city, to the libraries of prominent women's clubs and to certain public libraries.

RECENT POETRY.

IN the memoir which introduces the poems of Ernest Dowson Mr. Symons frankly claims for him the attitude of the "decadent." That term, as we have recently learned, is no longer to be used in any sense as a reproach, but instead as a literary Victoria Cross, indicating that its possessor has written "in a vein of exquisite purity." It easily may be that some who have gloried in the term will no longer accept it, now that it is stretched to cover the names of Shakespeare, Vaughan, Donne, and Quarles, but it is not in this exalted sense that Mr. Symons employs it. There is no question in his mind that the friend of whom he writes with sympathy and intuition was a man of genius, "not a great poet, but a poet, one of the very few writers of our generation to whom that name can be applied in its most intimate sense." Nevertheless he recognizes in him tendencies toward the unhealthy and morbid, which are steps in the process of decadence as we have previously understood it. The poems before us justify the praise Mr. Symons bestows upon them. They vibrate with feeling, and are stamped with reality, as having been lived before they were phrased. Difficult metres and artificial forms are applied to subjects so well adapted to fanciful treatment, and are handled with such ease and skill that they seem as natural to the writer as the familiar "long and short" metre was to good Dr. Watts. Dowson was above all the apostle of the doctrine, not of eternal, but of evanescent youth. For him, enduring affections, unfading pleasures, compensation for swiftly passing days, were not in the plan of life, nor was it the joy of youth that he celebrated, nor yet its self-conscious sadness. He belonged to the class for whom middle age and old age are empty of inspiration, who would pack the early years with experience at whatever cost, and who at least are careful to have felt the emotions of which they sing. His dominant mood is suggested in the poem called "In Tempore Senectutis":

When I am old,
And sadly steal apart,
Into the dark and cold,
Friend of my heart!
Remember, if you can,
Not him who lingers, but that other man,
Who loved and sang, and had a heating

let himself half-starve, and was found one day in a lodging with only a few shillings in his pocket, and so weak as to be hardly able to walk, by a friend, himself in some difficulties, who immediately took him back to the bricklayer's cottage in a muddy outskirt of Catford, where he was himself living, and there generously looked after him for the last six weeks of his life.

SONGS OF LABOR.

NOTHING could provide a more striking contrast with Dowson's delicate, fastidiously finished poetry than the rough-and-ready verse of Mr. Ernest Crosby's "Chants and Songs of Labour, Life, and Freedom." Walt Whitman's originality blazed a trail through the thick growth of conventionality surrounding modern poets, and many have followed him with a peaceful conviction of their intrepidity in doing so. Mr. Crosby's deep-rooted Socialism finds utterance in many pages of what one may hesitate to call blank verse, but which is certainly uncompromisingly devoid of rhymed endings.

But in spite of unpoetic poetry and illogical logic to be found in abundance on the strident little pages of this outcry against our social organization, there are also the results of observation definitely outlined. If Mr. Crosby could add to his downright vision William Morris's facility and eloquence he would be indeed a dangerous opponent of what he pleasantly calls our "silly, time-worn ideas," which many of us would be happy to exchange for better ones struck from a fresh die. Mr. Crosby seems to us, however, most convincing when he is least revolutionary, as in the expression of such little time-worn notions as this:

God has a house that's wide and tall,
And I'm a window in his wall;
How clear and pure I ought to be
If God must view His world through me.

E. NESBIT'S POEMS.

THE Rainbow and the Rose," by E. Nesbit, is neither decadent nor revolutionary, but fresh and individual in a simple way that makes agreeable reading of her more or less subjective verse. The outdoor world does not often entice her to praise of it, and when it does we find it like her "Garden,"

Once, however, she pays loyal tribute to the fair face of the English landscape, roused by the assertion that English poets give no personal love to their country.

Other collections of verse, pleasant but not dynamic, that have recently been published are "Girdle of Gladness," by Arad Joy Sebring, comprising a dozen or more rather monotonous but sincere devotional poems: "From Crypt and Choir," by Louis Alexander Robertson, in which the most satisfactory sonnet is dedicated to the great trees of California; "Poems," by Julien Gordon, which holds no promise of interfering with the author's position as a writer of prose, and an extremely modern version of the elegies of Tibullus by Theodore C. Williams, who does not hesitate to provide "chaperons" for the damsels of the Augustan age.

Hanotaux's "France."

The period between 1873 and 1875 is dealt with in the second volume of Gabriel Hanotaux's work on "Contemporary France," which G. P. Putnam's Sons have down for issue early in November. It contains the history of the first two Cabinets of the Duc de Broglie and an account of the double failure of the attempt to restore the monarchy in France. Four chapters are devoted to the analysis of the state of public feeling in February, 1875, and to an account of the material recovery and intellectual activity of France. This retrospective study in national psychology, the author explains in his introduction, actually extends over a period of ten years, from 1871 to 1880. For this reason, he has reserved Vol. III for the voting of the Constitution and the enterprise of May 16. With the appearance of this volume, the first part of his history—"The History of the National Assembly and of the Establishment of the Third Republic in France."—will be complete.

M. Hanotaux had hoped, in this Vol. II., to be able to give the history of the Presidency of Marshal MacMahon, but the material expanded, and so he was forced to divide it into two parts of a volume each.

The three illustrations in photogravure are portraits of Gambetta, the Duc de Broglie, and Ernest Renan.

"Rimes to be Read."

The Dodge Publishing Company has down for immediate issue "Rimes to be Read," by Edmund V. Cooke, containing all of the writer's miscellaneous verse, some of which have appeared in the magazines, and volumes on Reynolds, Turner, Burne-Jones, and Rembrandt, being the first in a series of books on art issued in popular form.

SOUTH AMERICA.

SENOR SEEBER'S book is not a mere collection of statistics regarding the seven South American republics named in the title, or a bold comparison and setting-off of one country with another. He has prepared the volume with a great purpose in mind, and every figure and statement, every illustration is directed toward the realization of that plan. His idea is the creation of a Zollverein among Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, extended, possibly, to Bolivia, Paraguay, Peru, and Uruguay, and, seemingly, though he does not say so in words, the erection of a United States of South America. We think it safe to say that this is the final end of his plan because of his insistence on the success of the German Zollverein of 1865.

Being a German, or, at all events, of German ancestry, Mr. Seeber has naturally been interested in the growth of a united Germany out of the nearly two-score separate Teutonic States in the short space of forty years. He quotes the details of the German Zollverein, and points out the effects that it had—"The historian Treitschke says that at the end of the first ten years the country had at last again attained the well-being which it enjoyed before the thirty years' war" (200 years earlier)—and continues:

> It may be easily understood how, imbued with these principles and examples, I have conceived ideas so beneficial and grand as those which this part of South America would attain if its interests could be united for producing results similar to those which the German States obtained without ignoring the fact that circumstances would not be the same, and that the fiscal and economic conventions between independent nations of different origin would have to be less strict and to be different in detail, and even fundamentally, compared with those which it was possible to establish among confederated countries, which eventually formed a single nation by the identity of race, language, and aspirations.

The time is ripe, Mr. Seeber thinks, for moving in the matter. Argentina and Brazil have settled their boundary disputes; Argentina and Chile have "got together," and it seems as if the questions between Bolivia, Chile, and Peru and "the inconceivable dispute" between Bolivia and Brazil over Acre were also to be solved; and then "this continent will be seen free for many years from the danger of international wars." He does not expect the plan to be adopted at once. "The difference of race and customs, the distance, the false economic principles which prevail in most of them" make slow stepping unavoidable."

But if the idea be premature the examination of the economic interests which affect every one of these countries, the study of their laws, of their riches and civilization, the comparison of their productive and economic capacities, may serve for preparing the bases of a future union, and what is more important, of a unification of money, and a political entente offering greater guarantees of peace and mutual defence against aggressions.

The aggressions, which Mr. Seeber does not expect, however, he says later, are "foreign absorptions, conquests, and invasions, the partition of Southern and Central America among the United States and some European States."

To further his plan Mr. Seeber considers the seven countries from various points of view; their population and immigration, education, Post Office and telegraphs, railways, tariffs, imports and exports, debts, armies and navies, and other subjects of more local importance, such as the question of inconvertible paper money, which still troubles some of the countries.

A chapter on the capitals contains much of interest. Of Buenos Ayres Mr. Seeber notes: "Already there are only four cities in the world, Paris, London, Berlin, and New York, whose life and movement can astonish the inhabitants of Buenos Ayres." Two hundred and twelve periodicals are published there, in languages varying from English, French, and German to Basque, Scandinavian, and Arabic. The book is well illustrated with views of the cities and industries of the seven countries; from the titles of some of them it appears that Buenos Ayres owes much to Mr. Seeber, who founded the historical museum, built the town of Catalina, the Galleria Florida, which houses the Museum of Fine Arts; gave his house to the university, and as Mayor of Buenos Ayres founded the zoological gardens. His plan as set forth in this volume is interesting and sensible. When it is carried out Señor Seeber will deserve to rank with the Grand Old Man of Argentina, Gen. Bartolomé Mitré.

ENGLISH CAVALIERS.

WITH MILTON AND THE CAVALIERS. By Mrs. Frederick Boas. 12mo. Pp. viii.-336. New York: James Pott & Co. $1.50.

THIS book is a collection of biographical sketches relating to the chief personages in England at the time of the civil war. The only connection that binds them together is the common period of which they treat and the historical thread that runs through them. The political, military, religious, literary, and social figures of the time are all illustrated in these essays, which, taken altogether, thus present in a way a sort of picture of the moving forces of the period. They are well and clearly written and without bias. There is appreciation and understanding for the principles and point of view of Roundhead and Cavalier alike.

Thus Charles I.'s personal valor and true religious devotion, his patience and dignity as a royal captive, are recognized, not less than his weakness and perfidiousness, and the narrowness of his understanding that cost him his throne and his life. The sketch of Cromwell is brief and does justice to that iron character which "waged war on the whole with mercy and moderation," and which trained him after forty to be first an excellent soldier, then an able and successful General, and the founder of the New Model army. As Protector his endeavor was conscientious to build up again the institutions of his country as they had been in earlier days. Then we come again to the Cavaliers, and for them Mrs. Boas evidently has a soft spot in her heart, as for them who have kept alive the noblest side of the English "loyal passion for our temperate Kings." She has an entertaining account of the manners of the time, and then sketches the three chief Generals of Charles's forces, Prince Rupert, Montrose, and Goring.

In depicting the Puritan she tries to keep to the hither side of the extremist type; for the word has been made to cover a wide significance. John Hampden and Col. Hutchinson are the men the author chooses for its illustration. Strange contrasts in the religious activities of the time are afforded by a consideration of the careers of Laud, Bishop Juxon, Bunyán, Jeremy Taylor, George Fox, George Herbert, and Lord Falkland. Among the secular writers are Lord Clarendon, historian of the civil war, and Sir Thomas Browne, whose minute learning and strange mixture of dreamy faith and fantastic imagery have been the delight of his admirers, and are to-day. There is also a chapter upon the poets—Waller, Carew, Herrick, Lovelace, Suckling, the Court poets; Vaughan, Traherne, and Crashaw, the religious; while there is a closing chapter devoted to Milton.

Mrs. Boas's literary criticism has no claim to distinction or original insight. Nor has her narrative, either biographical or historical, great and unusual force or illumination. But she has written soundly and soberly and from abundance of information. She has not made her work abstruse, and it is a clear and consistent account of a momentous period in English history.

Modern Psychology.

Dr. Henry Churchill King of Oberlin College, author of "Theology and the Social Consciousness," &c., has undertaken, in his new book, "Rational Living: Some Practical Inferences from Modern Psychology," which is out this week from the Macmillan Company, to make generally available the most valuable suggestions for living that can be drawn from the results of the best workers in psychology. While the book does not aim to be a technical treatise upon psychology nor profess to embody the results of original investigation, "it does distinctly aim," Dr. King points out, "to give in the field of practical living something of that sense of unity and sureness that the investigator in natural science has, and that can come only from a knowledge of the laws involved.

The book has been divided into four parts—"The Complexity of Life: The Multiplicity and Intricacy of Relations," "The Unity of Man," "The Central Importance of Will and Action," and "The Concreteness of the Real—The Interrelatedness of All." Under each division an attempt has been made to give briefly but sufficiently the psychological basis, and then to show the most important derived practical suggestions.

NEALE'S SELECTED SOUTHERN BOOKS

Write for Illustrated Catalogue of 100 pages.

Four Years Under Marse Robert
By Major Robert Stiles.
Probably no other book has been published in America, in the past decade which has received more praise, and this has come from the North as well as from the South. The reason for this is shown by a review in the Yale Alumni Weekly, which says: "Written in clear and terse style, it abounds in anecdote tipped now with humor, now with pathos; personal memories flecked by the light of camp fires or lurid in the flash of cannon; touches of sentiment, religious, patriotic, and kindly, tempering the grim hardships and realities of war; view points of Southern strategy in the great battles of Northern Virginia, and of recollections not a few depicting the traits of the Confederate commanders, with many of whom Major Stiles, as adjutant, came into personal contact."
8vo. Price $2.

The Great Parliamentary Battle and Farewell Addresses of the Southern Senators on the Eve of the Civil War
By Thomas Ricaud Martin.
These pages contain the farewell speeches of the remarkable coterie of Southern Senators who surrendered their commissions to cast their fortunes with the Confederacy. These speeches give them rank among the great masters of English, eloquence, and style. No more pathetic scene is recorded in history than the farewell of these men when they surrendered their commissions to cast their lives and their fortunes with the Confederacy.
8vo. Price $2.

Forty Years of Active Service
By Charles T. O'Ferrall.
Being some history of the war between the Confederacy and the Union, and the events leading up to it, with reminiscences of the struggle and accounts of the author's experiences of four years from private to lieutenant colonel and acting colonel in the cavalry of the Army of Northern Virginia; also much of the history of Virginia and the Nation in which the author took part for many years in political conventions and on the hustings and as lawyer, member of the Legislature of Virginia, judge, member of the House of Representatives of the United States, and Governor of Virginia.
BOSTON GLOBE: "It is a noble book, wholly worthy of the natural nobleman who penned it, and has the advantage of an individuality all its own."
8vo. Price $2.

History of the Southern Literary Messenger, 1834 to 1864
By Benjamin Blake Minor, LL. D. Editor and Proprietor from 1843 to 1847.
Dr. Minor, who has recently died at eighty-six years of age, was the only one living when this book was written thoroughly familiar through personal experience with the history of this old magazine; and through his long experience in the world of letters, of more than half a century, he has produced a history which is a distinct addition to our national as well as Southern literature.
12mo. Fully illustrated. Price $2.

Recollections of a Confederate Staff Officer
By Gen. G. Moxley Sorrel.
Lieutenant Colonel and Chief of Staff, Longstreet's 1st Army Corps; Brigadier General Commanding Sorrel's Brigade, A. P. Hill's 3d Army Corps, Army of Northern Virginia.
With introduction by Senator John W. Daniel.
Gen. Joseph Wheeler: "It is a work of great interest. It is beautifully written and graphic in the description."
8vo. Price $2.

The War Between the Union and the Confederacy, and Its Lost Opportunities
By Gen. William C. Oates.
Colonel in the Confederate Army, Brigadier General in the war with Spain, fourteen years in Congress, Governor of Alabama, etc.
An account of the author's experiences in the war; a justification of secession, and showing that the Confederacy should have succeeded; a criticism of President Davis, the Confederate Congress and some of the general officers in the Confederate and Union armies; the author's observations and experiences as brigadier general in the War with Spain, etc.
8vo. Fully illustrated. Price $3.

Johnny Reb and Billy Yank
By Alexander Hunter.
Fully illustrated by Harold MacDonald and R. O. Tolman.
A book of soldiering by a soldier—not merely memoirs or recollections, but facts gathered from a diary kept from start to finish of the civil war. It gives the inner life of the private soldier of the Southern army.
The author served as a foot soldier for two years in the famous Pickett's Division and two years in the celebrated Black Horse Cavalry and he saw as much and as dangerous service and experienced as many hardships and won as much glory as any man in the Confederate Army.
8vo. Price $2.

History of the Ku Klux Klan; Its Origin, Growth and Disbandment

History of the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence,

THE AMERICAN NATION

THE scholar to whom was assigned the task of writing the history of the Revolution for the American Nation Series, Prof. Claude Halstead Van Tyne, has labored under special difficulties. The greatest of these, probably, is the immense amount of material that exists on the Revolutionary period, not only on its military, but on its political, constitutional, and social phases as well. The present volume takes account of all these phases. Prof. Van Tyne has succeeded in turning out a fresh, original, and, considering the limitations of space imposed, an adequate history of the Revolution.

The history of this epoch may be, and has been, written from different points of view. Bancroft and Fiske have taken the patriotic American standpoint. Trevelyan represents the liberal-minded Englishman in sympathy with America. Lecky is the judicious historian in the highest sense of the word. Prof. Van Tyne, while it would be too much to say that he writes from the American Tory point of view, sets forth in a sympathetic manner the claims and the cause of the loyalists. His exhaustive study of this class, the results of which he published some time ago, predisposes him toward a tenderness for them.

He lays special stress upon the social conditions in the revolting Colonies and shows what scholars are now agreed upon, that the Revolution was essentially a civil war. "The Declaration of Independence proclaimed not only war with England, but a civil war between the Whigs and Tories in America." We miss a description of the contest that went on in England, where also there was a civil war, though a bloodless one; but Prof. Van Tyne had not space for everything. There is a question that may arise in the mind of the reader of this book in reflecting upon the author's presentation of the claims and merits of the loyalists. If they were so numerous, wealthy, and intelligent a party, why did they not do something? If the Whigs inaugurated a Red Terror, why did not they get up an opposition "White Terror"? It is difficult to share the author's sympathy for so unenergetic a party whose most constant and characteristic mode was flight.

While Prof. Van Tyne treats military history in a brief way, he makes clear what the military situation was. He shows that made possible the existence of a more perfect democracy.

The great constitutional question in the Revolutionary period is, Where was the sovereign power? Was it in the American people or was it in the people of the States represented by their State Legislatures? Later when State sovereignty became an issue, this historical and constitutional question became of vital importance. As a historian Prof. Van Tyne rejects the theory that the act of breaking the bonds between the Colonies and England threw down inter-State barriers and formed one nation whose sovereignty was vested in Congress except possibly in a purely "metaphysical sense." "Few contemporaries," he says, believed that the Continental Congress was anything more than an "inter-State committee of safety." "So far as objective institutions were concerned there were, at least until the Articles of Confederation were adopted, thirteen independent and sovereign States which banded themselves together to fight a common enemy." Prof. Hart, by the way, in his editorial preface disclaims any responsibility for this view. "It is no part of the scheme of the series," he says, "to adjust the conclusions of the individual writers to the editor's frame of mind."

Mr. McLaughlin's task has been to write the history of the eventful and critical years from the defeat of Cornwallis to the adoption of the Federal Constitution. His subject matter includes the diplomatic negotiations leading up to the treaty of Paris, the history of the Confederation, an account of the efforts to amend the articles, culminating in the work of the Philadelphia convention, and the ratification of the Federal Constitution.

He reiterates Prof. Van Tyne's insistence on the necessity of viewing the Revolution as a civil war. Otherwise we cannot understand the problems that confronted Americans when peace came. The political problem was to get a Government in working order. When in 1781 the thirteenth State signed the Articles of Confederation, what Mr. McLaughlin calls the first form of "imperial organization," a "confederation of sovereign States" was established.

This simple arrangement, a confederation of sovereign States, performing certain functions through a body of delegates, proved in the course of time so inadequate that it is easy to pass these articles by with an amused smile at their utter unfitness for the work at hand. As a matter of fact, they were in many respects models of what articles of confederation ought to be, an advance on previous instruments of like kind in the world's history. Their inadequacy arose from the fact that a mere confederacy of sovereign States was not adapted to the social, political, and industrial needs of the time.

BOOKS IN PRESS.

Work and Plans of the Publisher—Some Immediate Books.

IN two or three weeks The Macmillan Company expects to issue what is described as "the most careful and searching examination ever published of the effects of poverty upon children." It is entitled "The Bitter Cry of the Children," and is from the pen of John Spargo. An introduction has been written for the book by Robert Hunter, author of several books on social economy.

G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish in book form next month "Lady Bobs, Her Brother, and I," by Jean Chamblin, which will finish its serial run in the November Critic. The book will contain a colored frontispiece by Frederick Simpson Coburn, and a full series of illustrations from photographs taken in the Azores.

James Pott & Co. are hurrying through the press for publication next week Lillie Hamilton French's new book, "Mrs. Van Twiller's Salon." This is, primarily, a love story, and introduces the reader to many types of New Yorkers—artists, scribes, and society people. In the opening chapter the more important figures are described and their characteristics revealed.

The "Constitutional Decisions" of John Marshall have been brought togeiher in one volume for the first time, and G. P. Putnam's Sons announce that they will appear in a few weeks. Some delay was caused in their publication because a large amount of material was destroyed by fire just as the volume was in readiness for the press.

D. Appleton & Co. are issuing "Purple and Fine Linen," the society novel by Emily Post. The scenes are laid in New York and Newport and do not shift elsewhere, except for a brief tour abroad, whence only letters are received.

The Macmillan Company has this week, with the publication of "The Forest Lovers," begun the issue of the works of Maurice Hewlett in the series of beautiful limited editions in which Lord Tennyson, Edwin Arnold, Walter Pater, and Edward FitzGerald have already appeared. The books are well printed and bound in heavy boards covered with silk, with a monogram of the author's initials stamped in gold in a spiral design on the front cover.

G. P. Putnam's Sons have nearly ready a new edition of Lavinia L. Dock's "Materia Medica for Nurses." The book has been revised and brought into conformity with the new Pharmacopoeia which became operative in September of this year. The volume is now in its forty-first thousand.

"A Lost Cause" is the title of the new religious novel by Guy Thorne, author of that much-discussed religious novel "When It Was Dark," and G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish it in this country in November. It treats with dramatic strength of dissensions in the Church, and the influences of ardent religious convictions on the characters of men and women. Written in all sincerity, the book can hardly fail to arouse wide and varied attention.

The John Lane Company will presently issue from the Bodley Head Alfred Stead's new book, "Great Japan." An introduction for it has been written by Lord Rosebery. Mr. Stead deals with the inner life of Japan rather than with her outside interests, while he also touches briefly on the late war.

A. C. Armstrong & Son of this city write to us as follows: "Referring to the notice in the London cable letter of last Saturday's TIMES, we have pleasure in advising you that we yesterday (Oct. 5) by cable concluded arrangements for the publishing in this country of the volume of 'Representative Sermons,' by the Rev. John Watson, D. D. (Ian Maclaren,) author of 'The Bonnie Brier Bush,' &c." This house also brings out here Dr. James Moffat's "Literary Illustrations of the Bible," which was also first noticed in the London letter.

E. P. Dutton & Co. are issuing "The Furniture of Windsor Castle," described by Guy Francis Laking, Keeper of the King's Armory. The work is published by command of Edward VII., who personally superintended the rearrangement of the many fine specimens of furniture, dating from about 1640 down, so that the collection may be displayed to the best advantage. The book is profusely illustrated.

The Macmillan Company is bringing out a new and cheaper edition of Drs. Richard Garnett and Edmund Gosse's work, "English Literature: An Illustrated Record."

At the end of the month L. C. Page & Co. will publish "China," by the late Col. Charles Denby, the well-known diplomst who served under four Administrations as Minister to China for thirteen years. His book is made up of observations, reminiscences, and conclusions. The author's son Charles, a present resident of China, has added a chapter or two on the events following upon his father's death. The illustrations include some photographs owned by Col. Denby, many of which were given him by Chinese friends and associates.

McClure, Phillips & Co. have on their late Fall list an interesting volume, in view of the two bundredth anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, to occur in 1906. It is "Franklin in History," by William Macdonald. The book shows Franklin's high place among the famous diplomats of the world through his achievements in behalf of his Nation at the French and English Courts.

Charles Scribner's Sons are just issuing the final volumes of Prof. George Santayana's "Life of Reason" "Reason in Religion," and "Reason in Art." Prof. Santayana has been invited to lecture at the Sorbonne in Paris on American literature, in the same course as that given by Prof. Barrett Wendell last Winter.

Dodd, Mead & Co. are bringing out this week the work by Prof. Ettore Pais of the University of Naples on "Ancient Legends of Roman History." Among the topics discussed in the twelve chapters in the book are "The Age of the Black Stone of the Forum," "The Origins of Rome," &c. There are many illustrations in half tone throughout the text. The translation is the work of Marie E. Cosenza of the College of the City of New York.

The first volume in a new and cheaper series of color books, bearing the imprint of the Macmillan Company, is "Normandy," which appears this week. It is written by Miss G. E. Mitton, and the pictures are from drawings by Nico Jungman.

E. W. Hornung's new volume of further adventures of Raffles and "Bunny," under the title "A Thief in the Night," is just coming from Charles Scribner's Sons. Here the sentimental side of the story of these "gentlemen" burglars is shown more dramatically and romantically than in the earlier tales.

McClure, Phillips & Co. have in active preparation a new book by Martin Hume, author of "The Love Affairs of Mary, Queen of Scots" and "The Courtships of Queen Elizabeth," dealing with "The Wives of Henry VIII." There is said to be much new material in this volume, which the author has been enabled to unearth on account of his position in the Public Record Office in London.

The title of Tom Masson's forthcoming book of humor, in press with Moffatt, Yard & Co., will be "A Corner in Women, and Other Follies." It will contain over 100 dialogues, stories, skits, verses, &c.

The Dodge Publishing Company is issuing "The Worth of Service," by Leigh Mitchell Hodges, author of "The Great Optimist," who also assisted Elisabeth Hamill Davis in compiling the volume containing "For Esch Day, a Prayer," bearing the same imprint. Among the poems are the late Secretary Hay's, beginning with the lines:

Defend us, Lord, from every ill.
Strengthen our hearts to do Thy will.

McClure, Phillips & Co. will soon publish a new volume by "Uncle Remus," (Joel Chandler Harris,) entitled, "Told by Uncle Remus." The tales are here related to the son of the boy who heard the first stories, and are "Why Mr. Dog Is Tame," "Why Mr. Cricket Has Elbows on His Legs," "Why the Turkey Buzzard Is Bald," "How Old Craneycrow Lost Her Head."

In a few days the Macmillan Company will publish "Ethical Gains Through Legislation," by Mrs. Florence Kelley. In four divisions it discusses "The Right to Childhood," "The Right to Leisure," "The Purchaser's Right to Knowledge," "The Right of Women to Vote," and the gain remaining to be achieved.

Henry Holt & Co. will shortly issue in the original German text for classroom use the play on "Herod and Marianne," (upon which subject, too, Stephen Phillips has recently written,) by the German poet, Hebbel. The book will be provided with English introduction and notes by Prof. Edward S. Meyer of Western Reserve University.

The A. Wessels Company announces for immediate publication "Contrite Hearts," by Herman Bernstein, dealing with the life of Russian Jews in New York City.

Poultney Bigelow.

Poultney Bigelow's "The German Struggle for Liberty" is about to reach its fourth volume, and The Harpers announce the book for some time in November. The events in view are those of the years between 1844 and 1848, culminating in the meeting of the German National Assembly at Frankfort. Certain chapters deal with the struggle for liberty in Switzerland and Italy, with Louis Philippe in France, with the personalities of Frederick William, Louis Napoleon, and the famous adventuress Lola Montez. Mr. Bigelow's narrative now extends from the battle of Jena (1806) to the "rebirth of Germany" in 1848.

IMPORTANT NEW FICTION

The Boss of Little Arcady

By HARRY LEON WILSON, Author of "The Spenders."

Illustrated and decorated by Rose Cecil O'Neill. $1.50.

"'The Boss of Little Arcady,' is one to be enjoyed in every page for its genuine humor, its sly satire without a touch of malice, and the story of love and friendship which runs through it and ends happily."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Little Green Door

By MARY F. STONE BASSETT

Eight illustrations by Louise Clarke, and twenty-five decorative half-title pages by Ethel Pearce Clements. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"This book carries with it all the exhilaration of a beautiful nature, of flowers, birds, and living things, and the beauty of a winsome personality of a pure, beautiful girl. It is a romance entirely of the fancy, but a refreshing one."—Chicago Tribune.

IMPORTANT NEW JUVENILES

Ben Pepper

By MARGARET SIDNEY. Tenth volume of the famous "Pepper Books." Illustrated by Eugenie M. Wireman. 12mo. Cloth. $1.50.

It was qolte impossible that the detailed record presented through the later Pepper Books of the doings and sayings of the "Little Brown House" family should omit Ben.

So Margaret Sidney, despite Ben's wishes, has written this latest volume. To accomplish it Polly and Joel and and David and Phronsie have told her most lovingly the facts with which it is strewn.

In The Line

By A. T. DUDLEY. Third volume of the Phillips Exeter Series. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth. $1.25.

Mr. A. T. Dudley, athlete and educator, has increased his "Phillips Exeter Series" to three volumes by a new book, entitled "In The Line," which tells how a stalwart young student won his position as guard, and at the same time made equally marked progress in the formation of character. As in the case of the former books of this series, the boys will like it for its good fellowship and accurate presentation of athletic information.

Dave Porter at Oak Hall,

or the Schooldays of an American Boy

By EDWARD STRATEMEYER. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth. $1.25.

Never was there a brighter, more manly, thoroughly up-to-date boy than Dave Porter, and all boys who read about him, and girls too, for the matter of that, will be sure to love him from the start. How, as a green country boy, he went to Oak Hall, and was given a place on the school baseball team and helped to win a great game, is told with a naturalness that is true to life.

When Grandmamma was Fourteen

By MARION HARLAND. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth. $1.25.

Through the eyes of fourteen-year-old Molly Burwell the reader sees much that is quaint, amusing, and pathetic in Richmond as it was before the war, and the story has the charm of manner and rich humanity which are characteristic of Marion Harland.

The Boy Craftsman

By A. NEELY HALL. Practical and Profitable Ideas for a Boy's Leisure Hours. Illustrated. 8vo. Cloth. $2.00.

This book is the very best yet offered for its large number of practical and profitable ideas. No work of its class is so completely up-to-date or so worthy in point of thoroughness and avoidance of danger. This element alone places Mr. Hall's work beyond comparison.

Dan Monroe

By W. O. STODDARD. First volume of Revolutionary Series. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth. $1.25.

Mr. Stoddard has constructed an excellent story, introducing the Concord Fight and the Battle of Bunker Hill and the arrival of Washington. There is plenty of excitement without doing violence to the carefully preserved historical outline.

Dorothy Dainty at the Shore

By AMY BROOKS. Fourth volume of the "Dorothy Dainty Series." Illustrated large 12mo. Cloth. $1.00.

This book will be a delight to all who read it. The characters of the book are thoroughly nice little girls little girls to read about and know.

Randy's Luck

By AMY BROOKS. Sixth volume of the "Randy Book." Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth. $1.00.

In this book Randy is the same fine companion for the girls who meet her for the first time, or have learned to know and love her in previous volumes.

How Barbara Kept Her Promise

By NINA RHOADES. Fifth of the "Nina Rhoades Books." Illustrated. Large 12mo. Cloth. $1.00.

The introduction of Dollie Marston, the heroine of Miss Rhoades's first book, "Only Dollie," and her good big brother, Dick, is a pleasing feature, and connects this book with the others.

The Runaway Donkey and Other Rhymes for Children. By EMILIE POULSSON. Illustrated. 4to. Cloth. $1.50.

Miss Poulsson, whose noted book, "Finger Plays," goes steadily through edition after edition, and who has long had a leading name in the kindergarten work of this country, is one of the few who can write really musical and well-liked rhymes for children, and her new book, "The Runaway Donkey and Other Rhymes," proves it.

The Only True Mother Goose. Being an exact reprint of the original edition published in Boston in 1833, with introduction by REV. EDWARD EVERETT HALE. $0.60.

A great many people of advancing age have a distinct recollection of this book, but it has long been out of print and copies have become very scarce and valuable. The Boston Library did not have one until 1902, and it is now among their most carefully guarded volumes.

Also fifteen other popular juveniles. Send for free complete catalogue

The New York Times
SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS

LITERARY SECTION OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 14, 1905.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

A NEW book that is sure to be widely read is "The Reign of Gilt," by the novelist, David Graham Phillips, who is also a journalist of the younger school and has trained himself to view life, when need be, from the alarmist's point of view. Mr. Phillips, to be sure, is not, at heart, an alarmist. He does not really believe, we are confident, that the country is going to the dogs. Developing democracy will find the means of its own salvation. But he has worked himself up into a fine mood of frenzy to describe the vanities and extravagances of this vain and extravagant age, and his descriptions are certainly eloquent and impressive. Mr. Phillips's book, which is published by James Pott & Co., is one of the three subjects of an article on the condemnation of New York society in recent literature, which will appear to-morrow in the Sunday edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES. The other books treated of in this article are "The House of Mirth," by Mrs. Wharton, and "Our Best Society," by an anonymous writer, about both of which we have already had much to say in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS.

FOLKS still insist, after Dr. Johnson, that the Scotch have no sense of humor, though we all know that worthy Samuel was joking in his ponderous way when he said so. The truth must be that the Scotch sense of humor completely entertaining that nobody who reads it ever stops to consider its author's faults of style.

THERE are, however, two chapters in the book which seem greatly out of date and which were never illuminating. The charm of Trollope's self-revelation lies in its perfect frankness, unmarred alike by malice or hope of favor. He wrote expressly for posthumous publication, and left the date of that publication to the discretion of his son. But in his purely academic mood Trollope was as artificial as we all are in that mood. His limitations as a critic and as a student of literature are sharply defined in his chapter on the development of the English novel and the work of the English novelists of his hour. His view of the scope of the novel is shown to be exceedingly narrow. His praise of Thackeray, we are forced to believe, was influenced not a little by Thackeray's kindness to him and his relations with the greater novelist in The Cornhill Magazine and the Garrick Club. For in spite of its effusiveness one does not get the idea that here was a man who really appreciated Thackeray. His dislike of Dickens is more easily understood than his admiration for Dickens's great rival; but his judgment of Dickens fails. His prophecy of the loss of vogue that was to be the fate of Dickens's books was a false prophecy. A generation has passed and Dickens is more popular than ever. However, we do not depend on Trollope for literary criticism, and even in that he is honest, though obviously more on his guard, posing more in the chapters devoted to it than in his statements touching himself and his work.

POOR SHAKESPEARE. Dr. Thomas Carter, who some years ago wrote a book to prove that he was a Puritan, ("Shakespeare, Puritan and Recusant,") has now written another to prove the poet's "wide knowledge and use of the Scriptures." This "proof" occupies nearly 500 pages, large octavo, and is calculated to leave the sympathetic reader of Shakespeare cold. All English boys, in Shakespeare's time, went to Church and heard the English Psalter (Henry VIII.'s version) read as well as passages from the Cranmer and the the army, and his inaugural address. Mr. Lecky's estimate is calmly dispassionate and presents a view of the man who is still foremost in the American mind of which we may all well be proud. The little volume of Mrs. Browning's love sonnets has for an introduction that charming paper by Richard Watson Gilder in the October Century of which we spoke a fortnight since. The volume contains, besides the sonnets, the six lyrics of Mrs. Browning which Mr. Gilder includes in the immortal singing of the Brownings' romance, namely, "Life and Love," "A Denial," "Proof and Disproof," "Question and Answer," "Inclusions," and "Insufficiency"; and three little poems by Robert Browning, "One Word More," "Prospice," and "O Lyric Love."

EVERY now and then Mr. Charles Battell Loomis writes a book. He can perform such work easily. His newest book is entitled "I've Been Thinking," and although the contents do not seem to be the result of any great intellectual struggle, the title serves as well as another would. Mr. Loomis explains that he felt the need of a book one could put down quickly, and stop reading at any time, and not finding such a book accessible decided to write it himself. We fancy he has succeeded and that this is just the kind of a book one can most easily stop reading. But there is always something of a market for humorous "snippets," and Mr. Loomis is endowed with humor of a good quality. Multimillionaires and "graft," the danger of motor cars, marriage and divorce, careless letter writing, girls' voices and the need of filling them early in life, breakfast food, mechanical piano players, cowardice, domestic economy, are a very few of Mr. Loomis's subjects. He has his brief say of many things, and James Pott & Co. publish his book.

SHAW AT HIS WORST.

IT would be an easy matter to say something questionably clever by a slight parody upon the title of "The Irrational Knot," by Bernard Shaw, (Brentano's.) But, unfortunately, perhaps, Mr. Shaw has made himself too big a problem in literature to be treated with anything but gravity. But after reading "The Irrational Knot," the subject of which need not be mentself, dealing with the ecstacy of love at first sight, telling of those strange and unreal knights of long ago, those ladies who, without a murmur, gave up all and at once to follow the footsteps of the men they loved, will satisfy equally with its gorgeous raiment. The story has already appeared in Harper's Magazine, but, presented thus elaborately, it should make one of the very attractive holiday gifts of the present season.

MRS. RORER'S COOK BOOKS.

MRS. SARAH TYSON RORER'S excellent cook books, which are not "literature," to be sure, but are most useful guides to good living, are published by Arnold & Co., Philadelphia. Perhaps the best of them for general use is "Mrs. Rorer's New Cook Book," a twelvmo of 736 pages, well illustrated, ($2.) This views domestic science in its latest development, and while covering thoroughly all departments of cookery, has a special series of chapters for the vegetarian. Recipes for cooking vegetables fill 163 pages. There are chapters on carving and the dressing of the table.

"Mrs. Rorer's Philadelphia Cook Book" ($1.75) is the old stand-by of many housekeepers. None of it is reproduced in the "New Cook Book." Other books by Mrs. Rorer are "Canning and Preserving," a handy book for every housewife; "Hot Weather Dishes," containing special recipes for salads, fruit omelets, and Summer desserts; "Home Candy Making," a book of recipes for wholesome sweets; "New Salads," "Bread and Bread Making," and "Made-Over Dishes," each of which costs 50 cents.

Mrs. Rorer has also signed little handbooks on "Dainties," "How to Use a Chafing Dish," "Quick Soups," "New Ways for Oysters," and "Sandwiches." She is a native of Pennsylvania and has devoted her life to the study and advancement of domestic science.

Lane Books on Music.

There are a number of books dealing with music and musicians on the Fall list of the John Lane Company. They will include a biography of Edward A. MacDowell, the popular American composer, written by Lawrence Gilman, and it will appear in the series of Living Masters of Music, in which other volumes are ready or announced, among them being "Paderewski," by Edward A. Baughan; "Joachim," by J. A. Fuller Maitland; "Sir Edward Elgar," by R. J. Buckley; "Grieg," by Lawrence Gilman; "Theodore Leschetizsky," by Annette Hullah; "Richard Strauss," by Alfred Kalisch, and others. D. Ffrangcon Davies's volume on "The Singing of the Future," which is just ready for the market; a volume of essays of Ernest Newman, col-

MEMOIRS OF BRANDES.

The Great Danish Critic's Frank Autobiography—Tschaikowsky's American Experiences.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1905.]

LONDON, Oct. 13.—William Heinemann announces a volume of "Early Reminiscences" by Dr. Georg Brandes, the famous Danish critic. It is said that Dr. Brandes has set down, with extraordinary frankness, the impressions of his boyhood and youth.

***

An interesting feature of the biography of the famous Russian compoeer, Tschaikowsky, which John Lane will publish in London and New York next month, is that portion of his diary covering his visit to the United States. There are many passages that will greatly amuse American readers.

***

Edward Arnold will soon publish a book by Mark Phillips, in which he undertakes to trace the influence of the great desert upon Arab architecture, religion, poetry, and philosophy.

***

A novel of contemporaneous undergraduate life in Oxford will eoon be published by Mr. Heinemann. It is entitled "Nigel Thompson," and was written by Mr. Taubman Goldie.

***

George Bell & Sons will publish in November a book called "Ideals in Art," containing a collection of the addresses of Walter Crane before the Art Workers' Guild.

***

Sir George Newnes, the publisher of many periodicals, announces a new shilling monthly called The Magazine of Fine Arts. It is described as an "illustrated review of the fine and decorative arts of other days."

***

John Murray expects to publish this month "The Empire and the Century," edited by C. S. Goldman, with contributions by experts on almost every conceivable aspect of imperialism.

***

A new series, entitled the Sacred Library, will be etarted by John Lane this month with a volume of the poems of Cardinal Newman. It will contain a number of Newman's earlier piecee which are now practically unknown to the reading world.

***

Fisher Unwin will publish, Oct. 16, a new novel by the author of "The Cardinal's Pawn." It is announced as "A Comedy of To-Day." W.

"ELEMENTS OF SOCIOLOGY."

THIS book, by Prof. Frank W. Blackmar of the University of Kansas, which the Macmillan Company is issuing in The Citizen's Library, presents a brief outline of sociology founded on the principles established by standard authorities on the subject. It is intended to be a "working manual" for the student. In the first part are discussed the nature and import of sociology—social life in general, the definition and scope of sociology, and the purpose and method. Book II., on "Social Evolution," gives a general description of the origin and development of human society, and prepares the way to the study, in Book III., of "Socialization and Social Control." The fourth section treats of social theory and the "telic" force of social life, showing the power of society to reform or devote itself along epecific lines of conduct. In following chapters are treated the abnormal conditions of society, the encouragement of sociological investigation, closing with a brief review of the progress of sociological thought. The references provided by Prof. Blackmar at the end of each chapter are for further study.

While including much preparatory material that might not be found in a critical study of pure sociology, "The Elements of Sociology" does not contain, the author points out in his preface, "the elaboration of many interesting theories and scientific discussions that might properly appear in an extended treatise on sociology."

Watson's Collected Poems.

Mr. Watson has two distinctive qualities which I would gladly have seen brought out in the grouping, had it been possible. One is the power of conveying illuminative criticism in poetical form, as in his Elegiac poems, in many of his Sonnets, and in the Epigrams, which last, despite the work of other writers who have practiced the aphoristic quatrain, assume in his hands an original and characteristic form. The other is the descriptive and meditative kind of poetry, which, though in subject it derives from Wordsworth, departs widely from the Wordsworthean method in its technique. To this class belong many poems which, suggested by some mood or phase of nature, deal with the greater problems of life and death, philosophy, and religion. These are not easily brought together without forcing them into a classification against which they rebel, and on the whole it has seemed better to adopt the simpler groups of the old collected editions, including even the time-honored "Miscellaneous" for those which refuse to be classified.

Thus speaks J. A. Spender in his introduction to the two volumes of collected poetry by William Watson, in reference to the arrangement of the poems. The John Lane Company is publishing the book at the Bodley Head.

THE RIGVEDA.

AN attempt is made by Prof. E. Vernon Arnold of the University College of North Wales, in his book, "Vedic Metres," published by the Macmillan Company, to examine the differences in metre of some parts of the Rigveda, the well-known collection of hymns on the civilization of the Aryas of India and their culture and social organization, and "to see whether they can assist us to obtain an arrangement of the whole of the Rigveda upon historical principles," the author writes in his preface.

The object of the work is "the study of the metre of the Rigveda in connection with its history, and of the history of the Rigveda by the aid of the metre. In this study the fundamental questions which concern the metre of the Atharvaveda and other early Indian poetry are implicitly contained." Prof. Arnold writes:

To students of the European tradition the Rigveda is not a book, but a library and a literature. Our acquaintance with the poetry of many other countries leads us quickly to the conviction that its ten "Mandalas" or cycles have gathered up the work of many periods, and that the original composition of the hymns was probably the work of many centuries.

He has divided the book into four parts—the text of the Rigveda, the metres, the rearrangement of the Rigveda in homogeneous parts, and the historical development of the art of versification. In the introductory chapter are stated the general conclusions which have been accepted or independently reached by the author and the nature of the evidence by which they are supported, and in subsequent chapters the different parts of the subject are considered in detail.

Education in Rome.

The historical method is followed by Prof. A. S. Wilkins in writing of "Roman Education" in the little book published by the Macmillan Company in this country, and the subject is studied in its successive stages.

The introductory chapter considers the national Roman ideals, the results of Greek influence, and the plan of the book. It is followed by chapters on education in the early Republic, under the influence of Greece, the elementary schools and studies, rhetoric and philosophy, and the endowment of education. Prof. Wilkins outlines the book as follows:

First will come the purely national stage. * * * For more than five centuries we have nothing like contemporary evidence; traditions may have been, and in some cases we know they were, colored by the usage of later times, and therefore may often be misleading. * * * We must first take pains to put out of our minds all that we can ascertain to have been of later growth or importation, and * * * whatever we can ascribe to Greek teachers or methods. * * * Next we shall have to trace the effect in this direction of the great flood of Greek influence, which poured into Rome from the middle of the third century B. C. onward, and this in the distinct departments of literary * * * education, and in the higher training of rhetoric and philosophy. * * * Then * * * the days of the later republic and early empire * * * may be studied.

Economics of Agriculture.

A new volume in The Citizens' Library of Economics, Politics, and Sociology, which is appearing with the imprint of the Macmillan Company, is "An Introduction to the Study of Agricultural Economics," by Prof. Henry C. Taylor of the University of Wisconsin, an expert in the office of Experimept Stations, United States Department of Agriculture. The book deals with the "Factors of Agricultural Production" land, capital and goods, and population; the "Economic Properties of the Factors," "The Guiding Principle in the Organization of the Farm," "The Organization of the Farm," the size of farms, forces and conditions determining prices of agricultural products, "Distribution of Wealth," how to estimate the value of farm lands and equipments, how the farmer can acquire land, "Tenancy and Land Ownership in the United States," and "The Adjustment of the Relations Between Landlords and Tenants in England."

The purpose and aim of the book are set forth in the introductory chapter. The author has attempted to set forth clearly the fundamental economic principles which, when followed by the "rational" farmer, lead the way to success in agricultural production; and "to analyse the conditions of agricultural production that those who make the laws which are intended to adjust the economic relations of those engaged in this industry may act intelligently."

The Long Evening Time

IF there is any season when a publisher may ask for serious attention to the announcements of books on which work has been going on for a year, or perhaps several years, it is now. The booksellers of the country have been generous in their orders this fall, and all of the books described below are to be found in all good book-stores in the United States. We ask readers of The Times to look at the publications which attract them at their local book-stores; or, if out of reach of a book-store, the books will be sent direct from our office at the prices indicated, except in the case of net books, when an extra charge for postage is made. NEW BOOKS OF THE AUTUMN SEASON.

The Outlook as the Publishers See It—Classified Lists of New Publications in All Branches of Literature.

AMONG the fifteen hundred or so new books which the publishers have provided for what is called the Autumn season there is certainly no one single work in any field—whether in fiction, travel, biography, history, sociology,—which throws a shadow long enough athwart its fellows to produce a scenic effect. The representative of one of the largest publishers was saying that the output of books for the season seemed to him to cover more ground than ever before. But an analysis of the titles showed that this impression of expansiveness is due to the absence of conspicuous landmarks to throw the field into perspective. There is no high-towering novel (either for literary merit or public appeal) around which all other novels must group themselves, there is no biography to dwarf other biographies, the war in the Far East no longer concentrates public attention on a single branch of the work of the "international reporter," the man who writes books about interesting parts of the earth and the events passing there. The international reporter has usually distributed himself pretty widely; under present conditions his geographical range appears, with more minute divisions of the readers' time, to be widened. There have been, in fact, so many interesting things going on—in Japanese waters, at Portsmouth, at Panama, in Scandinavia, Hungary, India, Morocco, South Africa—that the book crop of writings about most of them has still to be harvested.

In biography they are for the most part gathering in the minor prophets, though there is Bielchowsky's biography of Goethe, E. V. Lucas's "Life of Charles and Mary Lamb," Herbert Paul's "Life of Froude," and Chesterton's "Life of Dickens." By the way, in this matter of minor prophets, since New England's worthies have been pretty well worked out, they are doing very minor prophets, indeed, there; and the South adds each year a volume or two of memoirs by women—memoirs which in the matter of vivacity suggest the French. Mrs. Wright's book is a contemporary example of that kind. Besides, of course, there is Mrs. Pennell's, "Hans Breitmann," Col. Higginson's "Parts of a Man's Life," and Marie Hansen Taylor's "On Two Continents." In this connection, several publishers venture the assertion that matters historical seem, in order to gain public favor, to need to be given the biograph-tion." Again, these titles serve merely as samples.

Following a very successful example, many publishers are providing handsomely illustrated descriptive volumes, like Mortimer Mempes's "India," Mr. Crawford's "Venice," E. V. Lucas's "A Wanderer in Holland," "Rowland Thirlmere's "Letters from Catalonia," and George Gilbert's "Cathedral Cities of England." One house has a very unusual edition of Rip Van Winkle, with unique illustrations in color by Arthur Rackham.

Of books of the essay kind there are a number; some new, like Mr. Huneker's "Visionaries," others revived, like Oscar Wilde's "Intentions."

Of poems there is no great show of strictly modern instances, and of nature books not quite so many—though the reduced number includes some excellent examples of several variations of this species by Thompson Seton, Caspar Whitney, Edwin Sandys, and others. Books on sociological subjects are very numerous and important. As one of the publishers remarked, the reading public is beginning to take a deep interest in the process by which it is ground between the upper millstone of finance and the lower millstone of labor.

SEVEN BOOKS HARD TO BEAT

PERSONS AND PLACES
By JOEL BENTON

No recommendation of this book is much needed beyond Mr. Benton's name—an appearance of rare grace and fascination of style and an unmatchable store of rich reminiscence of the great spirits whom Mr. Benton knew and met as familiar friends: Matthew Arnold, Emerson, Bryant, Greeley—all are here in colors of absolutely living reality. No work of greater value from its subjects alone could easily appear today, and as Mr. Benton is already a permanent figure in our literature it may well be a book to endure. ¶ Choice binding with reproductions of 10 rare photos and prints Cloth $1.00 Leather (autographed edition) $1.50.

☞ Mr. Benton not favoring the use of his photo in the book, we have, with his consent, decided to present with each order received a fine engraving of the author, 8x10 inches, when 10c. is added to order to cover wrapping and mailing.

ADIRONDACK MURRAY
A Biography by HARRY V. RADFORD
Editor of WOODS AND WATERS.

The great Murray, a unique figure in American history, famous equally as preacher, lecturer, sportsman, author, has found his fitting biographer in Mr. Radford, the young man who has made his name almost as well known as Mr. Murray's in the line of Adirondack exploitation and protection.——In this choice book is gathered a charming story of Murray as he lived and did his work, with reproductions of photos and prints of great interest. No American library is complete without this biography. ¶ In blue vellum cloth 60 cents postpaid; handsome leather $1.60 postpaid. 10 illustrations.

A BROTHER OF CHRIST
A TALE OF WESTERN KENTUCKY
By INGRAM CROCKETT
Author of "Beneath Blue Skies and Gray," "A Year Book of Kentucky Woods and Fields," etc.

This is the remarkable story of a young man who, at first earnestly embracing Christadelphianism, gradually grows out of its narrowness into fuller light. His spirituality, his hitter experience through a literal interpretation of the doctrine of non-resistance; his views on the destiny of Russia; his comradeship with "Brother Nathanael," a noble type of the trne Christ-life,—all are set forth with the sureness of touch of a writer who has thought deeply and who writes as only an artist in words can write.

¶ In gray and gold. Frontispiece in four colors and three additional drawings in two colors, all by Sidney K. Hartman. Printed on heavy Abbotsford cream laid paper. $1.50.

JUSTINE
A ROMANCE OF COLONIAL DAYS
By EARLE KUNST.

The tinkle of the harpsichord and the clash of swords—love and war—make a vivid setting for this most brilliantly recounted narrative of the Revolutionary period.

Mr. Kunst has created a quartette of characters, each of which possesses a charm and makes an atmosphere distinctly his own. Ralph Wallace, the beau sabreur; Sergeant Janson, the dry-witted farmer-soldier; Count Lamont, with his stately dignity and wily diplomacy, and last and best of all, Justine, the stanch, true-hearted, fascinating maid who nearly turns the trend of Revolutionary history.

TRAILERS OF THE NORTH
By WILLIAM LEWIS LOCKWOOD

A book full of the tang of the "great outdoors!" With the keen perception of the trained newspaper man, the author has caught the real spirit of the vast North and has wrought, in terse and graphic style, a series of as fascinating tales as have been written of the Northland's making. In the veins of his men and women there runs good red blood. They are of a part with the wastes of white, the mountains interminable, the mighty silences and the lust of gold,—an atmosphere that has been carried to the printed page with singular literary vigor and charm.

THE INSTRUMENT TUNED
By ROSA BIRCH HITT
(Mrs. Isaac R. Hitt, Jr.

The unique title of an equally unique work. Mrs. Hitt has done womankind as well as mankind a valuable service in furnishing these sane, lucid, and reverent chapters, full of helpful and reasonable suggestions and directions, showing those who are worried, nervous, sleepless, or otherwise depleted, how they can, by simple practice of deep breathing, by physical relaxation, and by fixing the mind on high ideals, obtain partial or complete relief from many of their ailments. The author writes in a sweet and intimate spirit, evidently urged by the desire to be of service to her fellow-sufferers. It is a key to the quiet life, and teaches how to relax, and how to control one's self. ¶ Attractive binding. Cloth 75 cents. Limited edition in white and gold $1.00 postpaid. ☞ A CHOICE GIFT BOOK!

IN THE MICHIGAN LUMBER CAMPS
By CHARLES ALBERT WHITTIER

Mr. Whittier has cast into fascinatingly realistic narrative his own experiences in Western logging camps. He loves boys, they all love him in return, and this book (the first of a series) is for them and about them. It tells about things boys delight in,—bears, camps, hunting, etc., and what amazing adventures Harry, Tom and Dick had.

¶ End of the many adventures $1 net postpaid. 50 cents.

MRS. TREE'S WILL

The admirers of "Mrs. Tree" will be pleased to learn more about the delightful heroine of that book.

In "Mrs. Tree's Will" the gifted observer dips deep into the real sterling New England character, with all its originality, quaintness, delightful oddities, and severely local limitations. Illustrated by Frank T. Merrill.

EVE'S DAUGHTERS Epigrams About Women From World-Wide Sources
THE MOST ARTISTIC GIFT BOOK OF THE YEAR.
Compiled by A Mere Man and portrayed by A. G. Learned

"Eve's Daughters" flashes like a case of jewels. It borrows from the wit, wisdom, and brilliancy of many literatures. Unusual taste has been shown in the selection of material. A gentle tone of malice adds pungency to many of the aphorisms, but the note of contempt for women which has marred most of the witty writings about them in all ages is carefully avoided; as also is the note of commonness. Every page has an artistic and exquisite line illustration. The delicate marginal drawings, as well as the full-page designs, are made with rare skill by the celebrated American artist, A. G. Learned, whose covers for The Ladies' Home Journal are well known.

THE ART LOVERS' TREASURY
Edited by Carrie Thompson Lowell

This is one of the most fascinating books on our list. It may be characterized as "Famous Pictures Described in Poems," with an accompanying commentary by the editor, or, to quote from the preface, "Reproductions of certain representative pictures, accompanied by poems which have been written about them or which they illustrate."

THE MUSIC LOVERS' TREASURY
Edited by Helen Philbrook Patten

Every one who is fond of music, as well as poetry, will want this book, which is compiled with very unusual taste and discrimination. The numbers of striking poems compiled with very unusual taste and discrimination. The numbers of striking poems addressed to composers or written about musical instruments will astonish any one who has never examined the field for himself. Such great masters as Beethoven, Mosart, and Chopin, and such subjects as the violin, lute, piano, and orchestra, as well as more general related subjects, like "Musical Memories" and "The Might of Song," are frequent themes. This is one of the most intelligently made as well as fascinating anthologies which has been published for years, and it certainly fills a long-appreciated want.

A NEW POCKET EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE
Strictly up to date in contents and form

For convenience, serviceability, and beauty of appearance this latest edition of Shakespeare is unexcelled. It is a complete handy-volume set of the Plays, Sonnets, and Poems, ideally adapted for use in schools and colleges, as well as in private and circulating libraries. The explanatory notes are well suited to the needs of students. Introductions to the different volumes, and the commentary which follows the text of each play, are by Israel Gollancz, editor of the Temple Shakespeare. The Cambridge text from the latest edition of William Aldis Wright has been reproduced in this edition with scrupulous accuracy. Although the volumes are so small they may be slipped in the pocket, the type used is long primer, and the text is never crowded. This is the cheapest large type edition of Shakespeare before the public.

Forty volumes, uniform binding, 18mo.

Special form for Schools and Reading Clubs, flexible cloth, illuminated covers, 15 cents net; postage 2 cents extra. Cloth, per volume, 25 cents. Flexible leather, illustrated, 50 cents.

FACTS ABOUT FICTION

A good deal depends on how it's done, and love, imminent peril and heroic sacrifice have figured in many books, but the publishers' readers believe that a new California author, Charles Tenney Jackson, has so handled these themes, adding to them a good measure of humor, in his LOSERS' LUCK, to appear this month, as to have made of them "The True Romance." His heroes are largely filibusters from 'Frisco, their leader a yachtsman, and the heroine, Dolores Delgardo, an appealing and often pathetic Central American princess.

A sympathetic love story, life-like characters, humor and vivid scenes of German university and English country life are among the attractive features of Mrs. Alfred Sidgwick's THE PROFESSOR'S LEGACY, to be issued next week. Early in the novel a noted German professor leaves an unfinished book on corals and his young daughter in the care of his favorite pupil, an Englishman.

Mrs. Fraser's MAID OF JAPAN is at present one of the four most popular novels issued by its publishers. It scores, first, as "the most charming love story we have come upon for a long while," (London Athenæum,) second, as "a romantic story which has caught the very spirit of the country. . . . A book of genuine value," (Times Review,) and thirdly because, as The Times truly remarks, it is "full of artistic simplicity within and without. . . . The format of this slender volume is a stroke of genius." In fact Miss Bertha Stuart's decorations make it one of the prettiest gift books of the season. (12mo. $1.25.)

Probably the Williamsons have written their best love story in THE PRINCESS PASSES, that notable motor romance, which is devoted, with but little digression, to a single pair of lovers. This feature is so unusually effective that as conservative an authority as The Evening Post exclaimed: "Just a simple love-story, but concerning a pair of lovers whose outlook on life and love is so broad that to share it for an hour or two is to be glad that one lives and proud if the capacity for loving has not been frittered away." Concerning the other features of the romance, it said: "The action is brisk, and the descriptions of scenery are delightful. . . . There is originality enough to savor half a dozen modern novels." An eighth large printing has been called for, and, in the seven months since publication, the sale has been five times as great as was the corresponding sale of the same author's famous LIGHTNING CONDUCTOR, which may now be had in an illustrated edition, uniform with "The Princess Passes."

Not only Massachusetts but Texas is taking kindly to "THE DIVINE FIRE," of which a ninth printing has just been called for, but those who hope to find the usual qualities of a "best seller" in it had better leave it alone. It has some of the real divine fire, and portrays a poet convincingly, besides numerous other striking characters. Competent authorities compare it favorably with the work of Thackeray, George Eliot and Meredith. Not the least of its attractions is its humor. Miss Mary Moss wrote in a recent Atlantic: "In all our new fiction, I have found nothing worthy to compare with it."

A Story of the Sword and Cross

THE SON OF THE SWORDMAKER

By OPIE READ

The Great Tragedy and Triumph of Calvary

A DRAMATIC story of the life of a Roman soldier and his stirring adventures among the Gauls, the early Britains, the Franks, and in Palestine, including a vivid picture of life among the Druids, a princess of this race, named Vioden, being the heroine. The cold, hopeless philosophy of the Romans and the revivifying faith of the gentle Nazarene permeate the narrative, holding the reader's attention with a peculiar fascination. As the exciting course of events is followed, the blood is made to stir and the heart to beat with a strange quickening, subsiding only to the peaceful influence of the rejected "King of the Jews," so skillfully and delicately depicted by the author. Several historical characters are brought on the scene—Herod, Pilate, Nicodemus, Barabbas, Joseph of Arimathea, and the centurion who placed the crown of thorns on the Saviour's brow.

The secret thoughts and ambitions, the unbiased observations and reflections of a common soldier of Cæsar's legions, stated with the blunt honesty of a disinterested witness, throwing a new light upon the sacred story of the Cross.

Large 12mo, attractively bound in silk cloth, special cover design, illustrated with two exquisite colorgraphs and six full-page half-tone engravings. 333 pages.... $1.50

HARPER'S BOOK NEWS.

The Gambler

From the "Cleveland Leader."

GLORY BE, she has done it again!

Who?

Katherine Cecil Thurston, author of that fascinating story, "The Masquerader."

In Heaven's name, what has she done?

She has written THE novel of the year again.

What is it called?

"The Gambler."

And why do you grow thus hysterical over it?

Because of its pull on the sympathies. When a woman in a book comes out of its pages, and grips you like one in real life; when you get all a-tremble for fear that she may do this thing and groan and moan because she does do that; when, in a word, she seems so real that your interest is personal and you worry over her, then there is every reason to exult. —Cleveland Leader.

London Films

Mr. Howells carried an appreciative mental kodak with him during his recent London sojourn, and his delightful talk about sights and people in the English metropolis is most engaging. He draws apt and humorous contrasts between New York and London, chatting about the weather, street sights and noises, rambles about town, and his adventures with English lodgings and hansoms. Every page offers charm and entertainment.

The Travelling Thirds

Gertrude Atherton has told no more brilliant or captivating story than this. The Moultons resolve to include Spain in their European trip, even if they have to travel third-class. The brilliant sunshine brings about a kind of love-madness among the sober Americans and they become intriguers in a land of intrigues. The close comes as a decided surprise, and is achieved by a bold stroke of imagination.

Mrs. Raffles

John Kendrick Bangs has most amusingly parodied the celebrated Raffles by narrating the burglaries in which, after Raffles' death, his widow and Bunny are concerned. There are many hits, sly and open, at the foibles of society and at recent events of public importance.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY,

Publishers, 64-66 Fifth Av., New York.

NEW BOOKS OF PERMANENT VALUE:

12mo, about $1.75 net; postage, 12c.

From the purely historical view point and avoiding polemics and apologetics, the author presents to modern men and women a popularly written work on the origin of Christianity and the Church. Professor Pfleiderer's reputation as a philosopher and theologian insures the thoroughness of the work.

IN PERIL OF CHANGE. Essays Written in Time of Tranquillity. By C. F. G. Masterman, M. A., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. (Ready Early in Novem er.)

12mo, about $1.35 net; postage, 10c.

The author's attitude is that of expectancy in a passing period of quietness before the coming of a time of disturbance. The work includes brilliant criticisms of men and books, examinations of the newer ideas of thought, studies of contemporary society and present day religious influences.

BEETHOVEN: The Man and the Artist; as Revealed in His Own Words.

MOZART: The Man and the Artist; as Revealed in His Own Words.

Both books compiled and annotated by Friedrich Kerst. Translated and edited, with additional notes, by Henry Edward Krehbiel.

The utterances of Beethoven and Mozart on the important events of their lives, views of their art, estimates of other composers and opinions of their own works, religious views, &c. Each quotation is followed by a statement of its source and the circumstances under which it was said or written. The books are, in all but the sordid details of life, autobiographies. They are to the spirit what a chronicle of dates and events would be to the external existence of the men. (Ready this month.)

Send for interesting leaflets about the works of EDWARD HOWARD GRIGGS and complete descriptive circulars of new publications.

B. W. HUEBSCH, Publisher, New York.

"The Crimson Blind by Fred. M. White is one of the best written and most intensely interesting stories of its kind, and should be classified as a detective story, although no professional detective is introduced. The central figure is a villain who, by his machinations, has estranged the members of a family and brought them to the verge of ruin and despair. It is also the story of how a beautiful young girl tracked the villain and finally brought him to a well-merited end. Of course in exposing the villain our heroine brings together those whom his machinations had estranged and all ends happily. This is a story of action, of plot and counterplot, and the interest is intense from start to finish."

A French-English Dictionary Which Contains Some Remarkable Translations of English Slang.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

MY young daughter, while writing a letter to a friend in Paris yesterday, asked me what was the French for "peekaboo shirtwaist." I told her I did not know, and that it would be useless to look for such a recent word in any English-French dictionary. But she did look for it, and, to my amazement, she found it accurately translated in a dictionary she had borrowed. I have been examining this work and discovered a literary curiosity well worth telling about.

It is a freak dictionary and a most astonishing combination of very good and very bad ideas in lexicography. The title page reads "International French-English and English-French Dictionary." Where one would expect to see the names of the compilers he finds conspicuously printed the names of two "editorial critics" of the pronunciation! The stupid Fassy system is used, the most uncouth, unscientific, and cumbersome scheme ever devised to represent words phonetically. The editor, Mr. R. M. Pierce, thinks that dictionary users are handicapped by abbreviations. He believes in "sacrificing brevity for simplicity." The brevity is sacrificed with a vengeance, and the result is not simplicity at all, but exasperating complexity.

The persistence with which key-words are repeated makes one think the only motive must have been padding. "Sound" appears as a key-word seven times; numerals are always repeated as nouns and adjectives. An enormous space is wasted on matter that belongs to the grammar alone, or else can be perfectly indicated by the usual dictionary expedients. Nouns like "cheval" are treated as irregular (!) plurals and appear twice. The book is padded out at least fifty pages by trash in the shape of irregular verb forms, as if people used French dictionaries without ever studying the grammar at all. But the climax of pedantic idiocy is reached in the treatment of the words beginning with h. Instead of indicating the so-called aspirated h-words by a single preceding sign which all dictionary users perfectly understand, nearly an entire line is wasted on every such word by inserting in brackets, "No preceding linking or elision"! In this innovation, as usual, the editor, while sacrificing brevity, gives a solar-plexus blow to "clearness and simplicity" into the bargain. No "space-saving device" ever yet tried can excel this for wasting both the editor's time and the reader's time.

So much for the bad side. On the other hand, the typographical layout of the dictionary is the best I have ever seen. Key-words are set in bold black type, always at the extreme left margin. The distinction between transitive and intransitive verbs is carefully observed in the equivalent forms given in the other language. Superfluous equivalents have been skillfully eliminated, as will be seen by following two verses of the Scriptures, below which appears a heraldic design bearing on one side the motto, "By Wisdom Peace," and on the other, "By Peace Plenty." These mottoes are illustrated by two clasped hands, above which are two cornucopiæ and between them the staff about which two serpents are entwined. At the foot of the page is the imprint, "London, Imprinted by Felix Kyngston for Thomas Man, and are to be sold at his shop in Pater-noster Row, at the signe of the Talbot, 1615." It is printed on a heavy water-marked paper. The size of the page is 7 by 11 inches and the volume contains 976 pages. The head of each chapter is illuminated, as are all initial letters.

I also have another volume, with pages of the same measurement, and a title page of 1633.

This is entitled "An Explanation of the Generall Epistle of Saint Jude, Delivered in One and Forty Sermons, by that Learned, Reverend, and Faithfull Servant of Christ, Master Samuel Otes, Parson of Sowbreps, in Norfolke, etc., etc." These sermons are published by his son, Samuel Otes. Below the title three texts are printed, and below this is the design of a man plucking branches from a tree, with the motto, "Nolle altum sapere." At the foot of the page is the imprint, "London, Printed by Elizabeth Purslow for Nicholas Bourne, and are to be sold at his Shop, at The South Entrance of the Royall Exchange. 1633." This volume has 535 pages, and the heads of chapters are more elaborately designed than in the other work.

Bullen and "Moby Dick."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I have read recently various letters written by persons familiar with contemporary literature expressing their candid opinion on the novels "The Cruise of a Cachalot," by Frank Bullen, and "Moby Dick," by Melville. Bullen's work I have read several times, and admit its very entertaining and instructive value, and M. U. O. well says "In these days everybody prefers a well-written narrative of facts." It seeme to have been so for many years, since it is easier to have almost everything before. Look at the pathetic story of "Manon Lescaut," by the reader judge of that. She certainly misled me, and may have misled others. I hope that no reader misunderstood anything that I said, though I also intended to use "strictly popular language"—such as, in fact, I should use in talking with schoolboys or schoolgirls. That was always my habit of teaching boys and girls, and I have not varied from it in teaching and lecturing in advanced schools and colleges, or with audiencee of teachers in not a few Summer schools and elsewhere. My youngest son once said to me, after reading something of mine in print, "Governor, your style is too colloquial." I could only reply that, if so, I was too old a dog to learn a new way of barking.

So far as my article in your columns is concerned, there is no pertinency or point in all that "Scholastica" says about "writing for a learned society," "pouring out a bushel of learning," &c. The mistake hinted at is only too common with writers and teachers, but in all my own teaching and writing for fifty years and more I have never been guilty of it.

I may add that when writing before I did not take the trouble of looking into dictionaries and grammars for either facts or illustrations. In referring to "nothing doing" I did look up a few quotations that I had used to a book published in 1867, in order to be sure of giving them accurately. It occurs to me now to see what some of the latest and best authorities say about the use of "an" in question. I need not quote the Century Dictionary, which is generally accessible—at least among reference books in public libraries. It will be found to confirm what I said about present usage. The New English Dictionary, (Oxford,) which is "the court of final appeal" in these matters, says (after giving the general rules for "a" and "an":) "But in unaccented syllables, many, perhaps most, writers still retain 'an' before sounded h, some even before eu, u, as 'an historian,' 'an euphonic vowel,' 'an united appeal,' though this is all but obsolete in speech, and in writing 'a' becomes increasingly common in this position." On the history of the article the same authority says: "Though 'an' began to sink to 'a' in midland dialect by 1150, it often remained before a consonant to 1300; before sounded h 'an' was retained after 1600, and sometimes after 1700, as 'an house,' 'an heifer,' 'an hermitage.'"

It will be seen that present usage is for "a" and "an": "But in unaccented syllables is more common in England (as I said in my former communication) than in this country. I do not know that any recent grammar or dictionary on either side of the ocean refers to this usage as "unjustifiable."

Grammars often and dictionaries sometimes are wrung on other questions of this kind—as might be abundantly illustrated if that were my present purpose—but on this particular question, so far as I know, they are substantially in accord.

Swinburne's Rhymes.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Both by way of further illustration and of qualification of "H. I.'s" just notice, Sept. 30, of Mr. Swinburne's use of forbidden rhymes, it may be of interest to observe that, in the main, such use was a characteristic of his early as opposed to his later manner.

To accuse him who, of the whole poetic crew, is perhaps the most versatile in mastery of lyric forms, of want of the delicate ear that forbids certain rhymes, would be bold indeed. Mr. Swinburne's technical mastery was among the earliest of his permanent qualities to assert itself. It would, then, seem warrantable to infer that if in given instancce he chose to use certain unrecognized rhymes, he did so not from ignorance or lack of poetic sense, but rather from disregard of tradition or enthusiasm for experiment.

One of the features of "Poems and Ballads" (1866) most commented upon by contemporary reviewere was, to put it mildly, its unconventionality; and although that quality was most strikingly shown in choice of subject and concention of theme, yet it was a pervasive quality and affected technique in the narrower sense.

This is shown in such rhymes as "H. I." has mentioned. More of the same sort might be pointed out. "Laus Veneris" alone contains: Place, ways; flair, lovelier; snume, loom; men, rain; feil, insatiable; kiss, is; sit, feet; them, flame; brows, house, poisonous; grass, was; God, blood; whit, sweet; green, sin; cheer, her; mouth, doth; fruit, root.

An examination of Mr. Swinburne's latest volume of verse, "A Channel Passage snd Other Poems," (1904,) reveals the final result of his experiment. The omission of many imperfect rhymes shows that they were originally experimental, and that their author now agrees with the world in thinking them unsuccessful. With flame, name, rain, he no longer puts men or them. He has stopped trying to find new rhymes for love, and has acknowledged his defeat by the frequancy with which he mates the word to above or dove.

Mating in rhyme a strong and weak syllable, as, She is, cranberries; flair, lovelier; thing, working—was a product of Mr. Swinburne's earliest period. It is peculiarly interesting, historically, as being one of the most obvious and tangible signs of the influence upon him of Rossetti. This trick was, as Mr. Benson in his delightful biography says, "extremely characteristic" of the elder poet; and "Rossetti's magnetism * * * profoundly effected Mr. Swinburne's poetry." "In the matter of rhyme Rossetti was easily contented." He used this, is; was, grass; look, rebuke. So profound was his influence that it may be doubted if there is a single questionable rhyme in "Poems and Ballads" which has not its model in his work. But what was manner in Rossetti, due, it has been surmised, to lack of a delicate ear, was mannerism in Mr. Swinburne. It is not unlikely that he outgrew it in proportion as the magnetic power of Rossetti's personality faded in his mind.

Be that as it may, however, most of the objectionable rhymes cited by "H. I." or in this letter are absent from the latest volume; even in it, nevertheless, there are more than a few. They can no longer be charged to experimental imitation, but they may be supposed to be indicative of conscious choice and mature reflection.

Mr. Swinburne still denies that u and oo are incompatible: hence, through and dew, and moon and tune repeatedly.

He still believes in rhyming a word with itself: Is, is; be, be. It is probably on this ground that he justifies himself, although it must involve a stretch of the artistic conscience, in rhyming know it with poet, which he does more than once. It is because of this that he matches son and sun; wake, awake; and the rhyme which he may claim has stood his feet of forty years—ours, boure. It is but a step to do it, ruin; union, communion; and that audacious attempt at serious verse with comic material—rhyming honor with upon her.

He does not hesitate to use a rhyme to the ear that is not a rhyme to the eye, as, sealed, field; trees, these; his, Italy's. This results on the one hand in thunder yet, Mahomet; and, on the other, by a stretch, in eyes and paradise, and in that temptation against which novices are ever warned, fire, higher.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I do not understand why THE BOOK REVIEW and its correspondent "H. I." go to such lengths in "calling down" Swinburne and Madison Cawein for imperfect rymes. If warm, storm; morn, warn, and stories, shore is, are not perfect rhymes, then there is no such a thing in the English language as a perfect rhyme that I am aware of. Why should these two poets be chided for using exactly such cadences as the greatest English bards from the beginning have employed? You can seldom find twenty successive lines in Shakespeare, Milton, Pope, Dryden, Cowper, or any of the later poets without one or more of the so-called allowable rhymes, and occasionally you find some that are almost a penitentiary offense. Such rhymes as fume, doom; love, prove, &c., are distinctly permissible, according to the universal usage of the mightiest versemen of the past and of to-day. Cawein at least sins to far less extent than many of the standard rhymers that may be mentioned.

Why Grape Fruit?

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I see in a notice of a book John Lane is to publish on the grape fruit that he calls it the "shaddock." On this point I would like to refer to a most interesting article in The Pacific Health Journal for October, 1901, by Dr. E. E. Bolton, director of the Los Angeles Sanitarium Laboratory, in which he calls attention to the fact that the fruit is incorrectly called "grape fruit" and "shaddock." He says the latter is a very different fruit, known as Citrus aurantium decumana. He says it is called grape fruit owing to its growing in clusters like the grape, but that the name is misleading. He says the true name is "pomelo"; that the State Board of Horticulture has decided that pomelo is the true name. The pomelo is the Citrus aurantium pomelanus, and there are several varieties.

Some contain too much acid and lack the real pomelo taste, which is a peculiar but agreeable bitter combined with a sweetness somewhat like that of the orange, and a small amount of citric acid. Lemons contain 5 to 7 per cent. of this acid, while pomelos should contain but 2 per cent. or less. It makes a refreshing tonic drink in Summer and Spring, and should be prepared in the same way as lemonade. As an aid to weak digestion the pomelo should be cut crosswise end a little sugar added—the less the better—poured on and rubbed in slightly. Put in the refrigerator for five or ten hours, then squeeze out the juice and sip half an hour before breakfast or dinner. Appetizing jellies and marmalades are made of it. Its chief merit lies in the bitter principle in the juice, the nature of which has not yet been defined by chemical examination, but it is known to give desirable results as a bitter tonic, and indirectly as a preventive of fever, furnishing the desirable properties of quinine without the evil effects of the latter. As a bitter tonic it often gives better results than any other, and its effect upon the nervous system is excellent. Cases of incipient consumption have been greatly benefited under the pomelo cure. Its regular use improves digestion and nutrition. The pomelo is in great demand in the months of January, February, March, and April, but the fruit improves in flavor as the season advances, and when perfectly ripe may be eaten without sugar like an orange. And it is in the perfectly ripe pomelo that one finds that delightful "bitter sweet" flavor so much enjoyed by those who have cultivated a taste for it.

I would like to add to Dr. Bolton's article that the name "grape fruit" as applied to this huge fruit is really ridiculuus. "Why grape fruit when there's never a suggestion of a grape in taste or size?" I hope the name "pomelo" will prevail.

I appreciate your fine paper. The only trouble with it is that it contains so much of interest that it consumes much valuable time in reading it. Every year I think I must stop it from lack of time to read it, but when the year comes round I find it very difficult to give it up.

A MEMORY BOOK.

HELEN HAYES has designed this volume of blank pages with floral decorations in red lines to record certain periods in a girl's life from her "coming-out" party on. There are spaces for the signatures of the receiving parties at her début and some of the guests; a place for the names of those who sent flowers, and other pages for affairs given in honor of certain people which the girl attended; for breakfasts, luncheons, teas, and dinners to which she was invited and attended; also chafing dish parties and card parties, musicales, dances, receptions, and theatre parties; the different sports of the seasons which she witnessed or took part in; travels and shopping tours of interest, and in addition there is a space for pasting in samples of "her" favorite gowns; also newspaper notices, and a page for items concerning college, the volume closing with a page presumably for the date of "her" marriage, because it is headed by a wee figure with wings, veiled and wreathed.

Each page has a heading, the design indicating the subject to be written about, as, for example, heading the blank page for the records of "Five o'Clock Teas" is a Chinese cupid drinking tea; "Dinners," a cupid in a man's swallow-tail coat; "Dances," a tiny figure sitting behind a fan, the wings and head only being visible; "Spring Sports," wherein are seen three players in the distance and a cupid in the foreground, dropping bow and arrow on account of the scare he gets upon being hit in the region of the heart by a golf ball, &c. "Her Memory Book" is made of heavy paper and bound in strong boards, covered with lavender cloth, and boxed. (Small square quarto. New York: Harper & Brothers. $2.)

"The Horse in America."

This is the title of a book by John Gilmer Speed, the well-known breeder and trainer whose assistance has often been sought by the United States Government in developing special types of horses for the Philippines and the army. It treats of the buying of a horse, the stable and its management, "Training vs. Breaking," riding and driving, and includes an historical account of the breeds characteristic of this country and what has been done toward their development. Space is also given to the romance and sentiment connected with the animal, while Mr. Speed gives accounts of the careers of great racers. He writes in his introduction:

Most of the previous books have been devoted to special kinds or types of horses, without any effort to cover a very broad field. Some others have been frankly partisan, with the avowed purpose of proving that this type or that was the only one that was worth serious consideration. All these are interesting, but valuable chiefly to the student intent on going into the subject of horse breeding and horse training in all its branches. To do this an ordinary reader would have to study half a hundred books with the danger of becoming confused in the multiplicity of theories and conflicting statements, and with the final result of knowing as little in the end as in the beginning. In this modest little volume I have endeavored chiefly to show how the horses in America have been developed and have come to be what they are today.

Every breed of horse is considered in the book—Kentucky and Denmark saddle horses, Clay Arabians, Morgans, mules, thoroughbred, &c. McClure, Phillips & Co. will publish "The Horse in America" this month.

Chicago University Press Books.

The Chicago University Press announces for issue this Fall "General Sociology," by Prof. Albin W. Small; "A Decade of Civic Improvement," by Charles Zueblin; "The Silver Age of the Greek World," by J. P. Mahaffy of the University of Dublin; "The Prophetic Element in the Old Testament," by President William R. Harper of Chicago University; "Primary Facts in Religious Thought," by Alfred W. Wishart; "Methods in Plant Histology," by C. J. Chamberlain in a revised edition; in the Constructive Bible Studies Series, "One Year of Sunday School Lessons for Young Children," by Florence U. Palmer; "Ancient Records of Egypt, Including the Historical Documents," in five volumes, edited by Prof. James H. Breasted.

Prof. Moore's "Diplomacy."

"American Diplomacy: Its Spirit and Achievements," by John Bassett Moore, Professor of International Law in Columbia University, Assistant Secretary of State during the war with Spain and Secretary and counsel of the Peace Commission in Paris in 1898, will be published by the Harpers at the end of the current month. Prof. Moore surveys and analyzes the field of American negotiation and treaty making, and insists on the fair, square, and direct methods in vogue from the beginning to the present time as contrasted with the European evasive and delusive art. Incidentally the book serves as a history of American expansion as well as of a number of developments of usage, like the doctrine of expatriation and the falling into abeyance of the "right of search," in its extreme forms. Portions of the volume have formed a series of papers in Harpers' Magazine during the past two years.

"A Modern Symposium."

"A Modern Symposium" is the new book by G. Lowes Dickinson, author of "Letters from a Chinese Official," &c., which McClure, Phillips & Co. will send out shortly. The author presents a group of types—artist, poet, politician, &c.—and in a series of speeches has them explain and defend their methods of life and their outlook upon the things of the world.

The Upton Letters

By T. B. Fourth Edition, 8vo. Net $1.25. (By mail $1.35.)

"A book that we have read and re-read if only for the sake of its delicious flavor. There has been nothing so good of its kind since the 'Etchingham Letters.' The letters are beautiful, quiet, and wise, dealing with deep things in a dignified way."—Christian Register, Boston.

"Simple and natural, sane and human, these reflective utterances on literary, moral, and educational themes and on the commonplaces of daily life, have the charm that belongs to the genuine expression of a good mind and a good heart. . . . The little volume will create no sensation—Heaven forbid!—but it will greatly content a choice few among the readers of books."—The Dial, Chicago.

EDENINDIA

By J. P. ARMOUR

An optimistic utopian story, original and novel, chiefly composed of sociological contrast, romance and adventure, depicting a kingdom governed by the brightest intellects of the best social systems of the world. Incidentally it deals with a multitude of questions of human interest, and the sex relations are set forth in a novel way.

Riverside Press Edition

A SENTIMENMAL JOURNEY
THROUGH FRANCE AND ITALY
BY LAURENCE STERNE
(MR. YORICK)

The good wine of the "Sentimental Journey" needs no bush for readers and collectors. From its first publication in 1768, each passing generation has found it ever more delightful. So many of the more elaborate editions have depended for attractiveness upon questionable illustrations that it seems peculiarly fitting that the book should be issued in a simple and distinctive form, with a typographical treatment having some relation to the flavor of the text.

The volume is printed directly from Brimmer type on a beautiful quality of English hand-made paper. An appropriate wood-cut vignette on the title and a coat-of-arms in the only decorations. 500 numbered copies, in buckram, price, per copy, $7.50 net; postpaid.

QUERIES.

TO secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

J. J. MACBRIDE, Newark.—(1) Whose is considered the best translation of Don Quixote? And in what way do the various translations excel, particularly Watts's and Ormsby's, which Frederick Harrison mentions as the first adequate translation? (2) Will you kindly answer similar questions in regard to Homer's Iliad and his Odyssey?

1. We don't know whose translation is the best. Watts's is recent, and probably as good as any. The ordinary translations—Shelton's, Motteux's, Jarvis's, Smollett's—are said to be bad. 2. We think that George H. Palmer's metrical version of the Odyssey is as good as any; Bryant's translation of the Iliad we also like.

H. L. M., New York.—I have a folio edition, London, 1687, of Raleigh's "History of the World," printed for Theo. Foffet, Rev. Chipwell, Benj. Yorke, Thos. Poffinger, Geo. Dawes, Theo. Sawbridge, M. Wooter, and G. Conyers." The title page, in addition to this information, presents: "History of the World in Five Books. To which is added in this edition the Life and Tryal of the Author." The history is comprised in 837 pages, the life, which is prefatory, 41 pages. The life was printed for George Dawes and Richard Taylor, within Gray's-Inn-Gate, near Gray's-Inn-Lane, MDCLXXXVII. I should be pleased to have you tell me its approximate market value.

This is a copy of the eleventh edition; in 1890 it brought £1 15s. There is no record of its sale in this country.

L. A. DE BLOIS, Wilmington, Del.—Please tell me who published a small book of verses and stories for children, very delightfully illustrated in colors, and all by one T. Pym. On the cover, which, I believe, bore no title, was some such couplet as this:

"Children busy,
Children glad,
Children naughty,
Children sad."

This book was mine as a child and I would gladly welcome any news of it or where I may obtain a few copies, even if not in first-class condition.

T. B. Pym's "Outlines for Little Ones to Color" was published in 1882 by E. P. Dutton, and his "A B C" appeared in 1885 from E. & J. B. Young & Co. This business of the latter firm has been taken over by Thomas Nelson & Co.

M. W., Missouri.—Will you be kind enough to refer me to the latest books on etiquette and domestic science, especially as pertaining to English life.

The only English book on etiquette published recently is Mrs. Humphrey's "Etiquette for Every Day," Grant Richards, London, 1s. 6d. There are a dozen or more American books on etiquette published during the last few years, but we think that Mrs. Sherwood's "Manners and Social Usages," (Harper's, $1.25,) is still as good as any.

E. McC., New York.—Will you kindly inform me who illustrated "An April Baby's Book of Tunes," by the author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden," Macmillan; in black and white, "Child of the Parsonage," 1874; "Fairy Gifts," 1875; "Seven Birthdays," 1876; "Starlight Stories," 1877; "Topo," 1878; "Dame Wiggins of Lee," 1885, and "Stories from Eddas," 1883. Many designs, some in color, are to be found in volumes of "Little Folks," "Little Wide Awake," "Every Girl's Magazine," and "The Girl's Own Paper." Walter Crane's "Picture Book." I do not know, but the set of seven "Picture Books" referred to are published under the general title of "Walter Crane's Picture Books." "The Absurd A B C" is the third section of one of these volumes. Also the following toy books not included in the set of seven printed by John Lane: "The Railroad A B C" "The Farmyard A B C." "Sing a Song of Sixpence," "The Waddling Frog," "The Old Courtier," "Multiplication in Verse," "Chattering Jack," "How Jessie Was Lost," "Annie and Jack in London," "One, Two, Buckle My Shoe," "The Defenders of Puffy," "Nosh's Ark Alphabet," "My Mother," "Alphabet of Old Friends," "Princess Belle Etoile." These toy books were originally published by Routledge from 1872 onward. Crane also illustrated "Legions of Lionel," Cassells; "Pan Pipes," Routledge; "Romance of the Three R's," "Little Queen Annie," Hawthorne's "Wonder Book," and "The Golden Primer." He also illustrated a long series of stories for children written by Mrs. Molesworth, published from 1884 to 1890, mostly by Cassells. The foregoing information is taken largely from my own collection and other items from the late Gleeson White's article on "Children's Books and Their Illustrators," published as the special Winter number of The Studio, 1897.

EDWIN YOUNG, New York.—For thirty years I was a representative of the Queen's Printers (Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode of London) in the United States. In all those years they, and also the representatives of the Oxford and Cambridge Presses, offered a reward of £5 ($25) to any one who first drew attention to a misprint in any copy of the Bible of their publication, no matter how trivial. Just once such an error (of the press) was brought to our attention. At once Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode authorized us to pay $25 to the discoverer. We did. Once again an error was pointed out to us in a quarto edition of the Cambridge Bible. It was rather odd. In one of the chapters of the Book of Proverbs the first words are: "Every wise woman," &c., but in the "rubricated" edition it read: "A very wise woman," &c. The gentleman who drew our attention to this error was a clergyman. He did not seek reward. We had no connection with the Cambridge Press, save as occasional buyers of some of their issues, but on notification they corrected the blunder and authorized us to "make good" any copies of their book that we had sold.

Those three firms, Oxford, Cambridge, and Eyre & Spottiswoode, (the Queen's Printers,) did and do pay the first discoverer of any misprint in any Bible from their presses.

JAMES BRUNER, Marinette, Wis.—In your Sept. 30 issue, replying to a query by "Reader," you say, "We are wholly unable to identify Gilfillan." The George Gilfillan to whom "R. L. S." made reference in "Memories and Portraits" was a Scottish clergyman, a respectable if not prominent author, publishing with success circa 1850. Some of his works still to be had are "A Gallery of Literary Portraits," in three series; a volume or two of poems, and a very good edition of British poets, for which he wrote the memoirs and notes.

H. J. STORRS, New York.—Replying to "R. A. W.," New York, I am able to give particulars in regard to "Pelayo," an epic poem of the olden Moorish time, by Elizabeth T. Porter Bruch; 424 pages. It was published by Appleton & Co. in 1864. I know of no other poem with title of "Pelayo." Possibly there are others, however.

F. J. S., Buffalo.—E. L. C., who inquires from Peekskill as to education in Italy, is referred to the reports of the United States Commissioner of Education for 1888-9, 1890-91, 1893-4, 1894-5, and 1901-2. There is also a Circular of Information on the subject issued by the United States Bureau of Education in 1882-4, and it is treated in Matthew Arnold's "Schools and Universities on the Continent" (1868) and in Antonio Gallenga's "Italy, Present and Future," which is also rather old.

MASTERS OF OLD AGE

THE VALUE OF LONGEVITY ILLUSTRATED BY PRACTICAL EXAMPLE BY COLONEL NICHOLAS SMITH

Handsomely bound in Cloth, viii.-280 pages, $1.25, net. By mail, $1.35

Here is a book that is an inspiration to the aged. No man over 60 years of age should miss reading it. The book gives a record of the work done by men who have achieved their greatest triumphs after the "threescore and ten" years of life.

The book also gives suggestions on the Art of Living that are valuable.

The Outlook says:

"Two classes, in one or the other of which are nearly all readers, will find this book decidedly interesting—those who hope to live long, and those who, having lived long, hope to live longer. Personal memoranda and memorabilia abound concerning those who have mastered the secret of a really good old age; practical and proverbial philosophy scintillates continually, and attention is gripped to the end. As a record of the victories over old age and bodily infirmity won by men and women of many sorts, this book has a tonic quality both of physical and moral efficacy."

THE COMPLETE WRITINGS OF

Alfred de Musset

Illustrated, large paper edition, in Ten Volumes.

A writer who has endowed our language with admirable poetry, the brother of Lamartine, of Hugo and of Byron; a novelist rivaling Prévost, Balzac, and George Sand; a dramatist who, in one act, has made the Comédie Française earn more money than we give it in six months; one of those thinkers who has never once sacrificed the dignity of art to the ambitions of fortune and position.

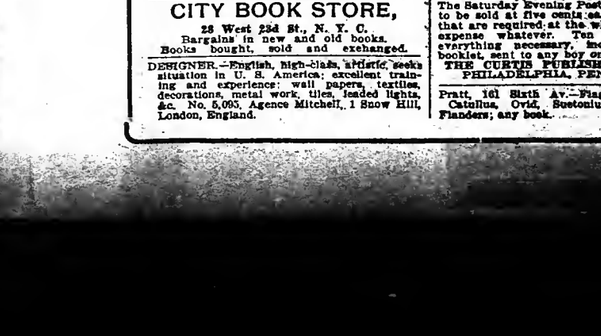
IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS

David Graham Phillips's New Novel



Ready About October 16th.

"A cross-section out of the very heart of our life to-day, with its big and bold energies and passions, the swiftest and intensest life ever lived by the human race."

"THE DELUGE" a story of high and frenzied finance. It is important to every fiction-lover because it grips the attention in a vise of steel. It is important to every patriotic American because it lays absolutely bare the financial dilemma toward which the country has drifted.

But in the clash of the great business conflict, the love element is not for a moment forgotten. It is the refreshing and glorifying touch in a novel of magnificent proportions and persistent absorption.

Beautifully Illustrated in Color By George Gibbs.

Dangers to the Face in Traveling.

Statistics Show 500,000 Accidents, Including 73,524 Disfigured Noses

In all cases of accident immediate relief is given to the sufferers by the emergency physician, if he is at hand, or by some unskilled sympathizer. In either case the victim cannot be attended to properly. The damage sustained by the Features of the Face is often permanent unless some skilled specialist overcomes the improvised surgery of this moment.

Where can you, reader, if your Features were ruined by a railroad accident, go to have them restored to their natural form and symmetry? To-day you laugh at such a question. To-morrow you may be hurt. If so, bear in mind that the Specialists of the WOODBURY INSTITUTE are the most skilled physicians of their class in remodeling split Lips, broken Noses, torn Ears, scalp wounds and all disfiguring facial blemishes which result from accidents. The best surgical aid will be given you. It is possible to correct any deformity of the face which, so long as it remains, must be a subject of keen embarrassment. The applause of beauty is always desired, but the pity of the sympathizer is shunned. The new method of Woodbury Dermatology is in keeping with the progress of the age. If you know a friend who should have his features reconstructed send him to the WOODBURY INSTITUTE. Consultation free, private and confidential.

GIANTS CHAMPIONS, THE SCORE, 2-0

Mathewson's Superb Work Ends the Inter-League Series.

CROWD GOES WILD WITH JOY

McGraw's Men Besieged in Their Clubhouse by 10,000 Cheering Admirers.

Two neatly dressed, ruddy faced, athletic looking young men, grinning broadly; one a giant in contrast to the squattiness of the other, walked along the veranda of the clubhouse at the Polo Grounds about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Below them was a sea of 10,000 faces, wildly emitting a thundrous eruption of enthusiasm. The two young men looked down upon the reverberating ocean of humanity for a moment, and then walked to a point directly in front of the plaza, where they were in view of all. The ten thousand throats bellowed forth a tribute that would have almost drowned a broadside of twelve-inch guns.

The two smiling athletes stopped, one of them drew forth a long sheet of yellow paper rolled under his arm. As the crowd pushed and fought and cheered he unwrapped an impromptu banner and let it flutter on the breeze. The multituds pressed forward like a wave to read this inscription:

THE GIANTS, WORLD'S CHAMPIONS, 1905.

Geological records show that Vesuvius disturbs the earth and that seismic demonstrations are felt by the greater number. But if that doctrine had been promulgated in the vicinity of the Polo Grounds yesterday, as Christie Mathewson and Roger Bresnahan of the New York Base-ball Club unfurled their victorious banner, it would have been minimized. For, as volcanoes assert themselves upon the earth's surfacs surely must that deafening, reverberating roar have lifted Manhattan's soil from its base.

The Giants, the most intelligent, the quickest, strongest, and grittiest combination of baseball players that have ever represented this city in any league, demonstratsd beyond opportunity for quibble or claim their paramount superiority over anything extant in diamond life of to-day by winning the fourth and deciding game of the world's championship series by the score of 2 to 0.

The victory meant an honor which has not hitherto fallen to the lot of New York through any other team, and by the victory of yesterday the Giants may hold up their heads in the athletic world as being the one collection of peerless ball tossers.

The crowd, in the neighborhood of 27,000 people, saw the battle, and a battle it was, to cheer the baseball heart and satisfy the innermost cravings of the rooter's mind. It was a fight of slow stages, but at no time during the contest were the Giants in danger, and at all times were they masters. It settled the question so often propounded whether the National or the American League offers the better brand of baseball. The championship decree of yesterday, to be accepted as final, lays at rest all doubt and demonstrates the transcendent superiority of the National brand and the indisputable invulnerability of the Giants.

And be it recorded right here that New York possesses the pitching marvel of the century.- Christie Mathewson, the giant slabman, who made the world's championship possible for New York, may be legitimately designated ss the premier pitching wonder of all baseball records. The diamond has known its Clarkson, its Keefe, and its Caruthers. Their records radiate. But to Mathewson belongs the palm, for his almost superhuman accomplishment during the series which closed yesterday will stand as a mark for all pitchers of the future.

Mathewson's Great Record.

Figures show best just what Mathewson accomplished. In the three victories over which he presided he twirled twenty-seven innings. During that series he allowed not a single run; not an Athletic even reached third base. He was touched for only a total of fifteen hits, and by men who are reckoned as the American League's strongest battsrs; he allowed only one pass to first, hit only a single batsman, and struck out sixteen men. The record is a classic. Basebail New York appreciates this work. That fact was amply demonstrated yesterday, when it gave Mathewson a marvelous vocal panegyric and placed upon his modest brow a bellowed wreath that evoked only a half-suppressed smile and bow.

The game yesterday was one of giants—clean, fsst, and decisive. Both teams were keyed to the point of desperation, for to the Giants it meant rosy conquest and to the Athletics a saving clausc which would offer them yet a chance to redeem themselves. But the Giants were not to be repulsed. They went at the ball in the first inning with a we-never-can-lose expression of dogged determination, and there was not a minute during play in which that spirit didn't manifest itself. Philadelphia tried its best, but, strive as hard as it did, it was only a shadow reflecting the masterful Mathewson's will. He bestrode the field like a mighty Colossus, and the Athletics peeped about the diamond like pigmies who struggled gallantly for their lives, but in vain.

Bender, the much feared brave from the Carlisle reservation, sought to repeat his scalping bee of Tuesday, but the Spartan McGraw laconically expressed the situation when at the beginning of the game he remarked good-naturedly to the Athletics' pitcher:

"It will be off the warpath for you to-day, Chief." The stolid, phrlegmatic copper-colored man only smiled grimly.

"It's uncertain," he replied, "but I did it once, and I'm going to do my best to do it again."

Analyzed to the statistical point the twirling feature of the game shows little advantage to either side, but when weighed in parts Mathewson had by far the advantage. Five hits were all that the Giants could register off Bender,

SHONTS CUTS ALL SALARIES.

Canal Employes Prepare to Lay Protest Before the Commission.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—One of the changes made by the Shonts Canal Commission from the régime of the old organization headed by Admiral Walker has been a general pruning of salaries. The whole salary system has been revised downward.

So far has this been carried that a number of employes are planning to lay their grievances before the commission when it returns to this city and ask for a restoration of the rates prevailing under Admiral Walker.

The employes who received $3,000 have been cut to $1,800. Those who got $2,000 now receive $1,600. One of the latest cuts has been in the salaries of women clerks in the purchasing division, who get $740 now instead of $900.

Under Admiral Walker the place of Treasurer was held by Admiral A. S. Kenny, retired, at $7,500, and he was assisted by a Deputy Treasurer at $3,000. The Deputy Tressurer had an Assistant Deputy Treasurer at $1,800. Mr. Shonts has found James G. Jester capable of performing the work for $3,000, without any assistants or deputies. Mr. Jester has found that he has not work enough to keep busy some of the clerks who assisted Admiral Kenny, and they have been laid off.

All this, however, does not imply that any less money is being spent by the present commission than the old one. On the contrary, ths cost is greater, the force having been increased in other directions.

A THEATRE TRAFFIC SQUAD.

McAdoo Has a Plan to Lift the Carriage Blockades.

For the benefit of those who go to and from the theatres in street cars, Commissioner McAdoo will inaugurate a theatre traffic squad, which will work entirely independent of the regular patrolmen now stationed at the playhouses. The new squad will be under the direction of Acting Inspector O'Brien.

The new squad will be made up of mounted men and foot men. Its particular business will be to see that long lines of cabs do not encircle the theatres at the end of the performances, so that ordinary folk who patronize the cars will not have to stand and wait until the fortunate beings who have carriages and cabs at their command ride out of the way.

Last night Mr. McAdoo visited the theatrical neighborhood about Times Square and Herald Square. He saw people come charging out of the playhouses, some trying to reach carriages and cabs, othsrs vainly endeavoring to get to cars.

The cabs and carriages followed one another so closely in front of the playhouses that the crowds found it hard to get by them. Street cars were stopping all along the street, and the whole business was in a tangle.

The new squad will keep the vehicles in a line, will start them all off in one direction, will always keep sufficient space between vehicles to allow people to get to the cars, and will attempt to bring some kind of order out of chaos.

The theatrical traffic squad will have men at every theatre, but especial attention will be paid to the car-congested districts about Times Square and Herald Square.

SCHWAB AIDS HIS OLD HOME.

Williamsburg Has a Big Paper Mill, Built Largely at His Expense.

Special to The New York Times.

WILLIAMSBURG, Penn., Oct. 14.—Williamsburg has obtained a new lease of life, through the generosity of Charles M. Schwab, who was born here. To-day flags are flying from every building and there is a general holiday, for a new paper mill, built at an expense of $900,000, was formally opened.

Mr. Schwab practically built the mill. When the scheme was proposed and a stock company was organized to build the plant, Mr. Schwah was appealed to, for it was known that the town could not raise sufficient money. After the townspeople had subscribed for what stock they were able to take the list was taken to Mr. Schwab, and he subscribed for the balance. That amount was so large that it practically gives Mr. Schwab a controlling interest.

For fifty years Williamsburg has been asleep, and nothing seemed able to arouse it. Now there is talk of a boom. This afternoon Mr. Schwab came to Williamsburg in his private car and made a speech to the big crowd assembled.

MORGAN AGAINST RATE LAW.

Alabaman Takes Issue with President in a Public Statement.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 14.—Senator John T. Morgan of Alabama yesterday made a statement taking issue with President Roosevelt's policy of conferring greater powers for the regulation of railway rates on the Inter-State Commerce Commission. He said:

"Ths proposition of the President contemplates nothing less than radical changes both in the principle of taxation and in the principle of distinct and separate powers delegated by the Constitution and the statute law to the Federal Government on the one hand, and on the other to the States."

PACKING HOUSE LABOR WAR.

Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Will, It Is Said, Discharge Union Men.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—The packing house of Schwarzschild & Sulzberger will, it is said, discharge all the union employes at its plant on Monday morning.

The attitude of this house has caused a stir among the packing house workers, who have recently been reorganized under the leadership of President Donnelly of the Butcher Workmen. At a meeting of the Packing Trades Council last night it was decided to take immediate steps of a defensive nature.

A strike is not contemplated, but the stock yards' unions hope to enlist the active aid of the American Federation of Labor. An appeal will probably be made to the National body through the Chicago Federation of Labor.

Donnelly and other leaders are in favor of having a National boycott declared against the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Company.

REGISTER TO-MORROW!

To-morrow is the LAST day of registration. The registry boards sit from 7 A. M. to 10 P. M. This is your last chance. The list of registration places is printed in The Times.

CITY REGISTRATION 498,651 FOR 3 DAYS

That Is a Gain of 10,000 Over Last Mayoralty Figures.

BUT ALL OUTSIDE MANHATTAN

Brooklyn, Queens, the Bronx, and Richmond Contribute the Increase —Loss in This Borough.

The total city registration for three days is 498,651, an increase of 9,973 over the registration in the first three days of 1903, the last Mayoralty year. The gain is all in the three outside boroughs. Brooklyn has gained 9,249, Queens 5,000, and Richmond 640. Manhattan and the Bronx contribute a loss of 4,647.

Yesterday, the third day of registration, resulted in the registration of 84,339 voters in Manhattan and the Bronx, 179,271 in Brooklyn, 28,250 in Queens, and 11,284 in Richmond.

The Twenty-third leads the Manhattan districts. The Twenty-first is next, and the Thirty-first comes third.

In the Bronx the Thirty-fifth leads as it also leads all the districts in New York County. The Thirty-fifth gained more than 4,000 over 1903.

There are some notable gains in Manhattan. The McManus has made good his boast to get out the greatest registration his district has ever had. For three days this year there are 6,646 Fifteenth District voters registered, of whom most are of course Democrats. In 1903, the Fifteenth's registration for three days was 6,335 and in 1901 it was only 6,328. Gains over 1901 are not common this year.

In the Sixteenth District Samuel S. Koenig and Patrick Keenan, Republican and Democratic leaders, respectively, are getting the voters to the places of registration in record numbers. The district is ahead both of 1903 and 1901.

There are heavy gains in Brooklyn. In the Seventh (Coney Island) District, there is a gain of 2,724 over two years ago; in the Twelfth District, a gain of nearly 1,000; in the Sixteenth—a Republican stronghold—a gain of equal proportions; in the Eighteenth—also Republican—a gain of 2,186 over 1903, of 2,597 over 1901. In the Twentieth District there is a gain of 1,118, and in the district of great distances, the Twenty-first, a gain of 2,287 over 1903.

The total gain in Brooklyn for three days over the corresponding period of 1903, is 9,249.

In Queens the gain is one that will make every political manager sit up and take notice. The gain over 1903 is 5,000, and over 1901 nearly 6,000.

These tables show the registration for three days complete:

PRESIDENT GETS NEW CANE.

Virginian Takes Him One Carved with Civil War History.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—Interposed among the official calls on the President to-day was one which was entirely unexpected. The caller was Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., who had come on from Harvard with a classmate and astonished the family by walking into the White House. He came so that he could see something of his parents before their departure for the South on Wednesday.

An old man from Virginia came to present to the President a cane. It turned out to be such a gift as Mr. Roosevelt likes to get, and he asked for the giver's name and was sorry not to get it. The cane was the old man's own work, and on it were carved the names of all the principal battles of the civil war, with the names of the leading Generals and dates of death of those killed in battle.

LOUIS NAPOLEON SLAIN?

Rumor in Paris That He Has Been Assassinated at Tiflis.

PARIS, Sunday, Oct. 15.—The Petit Caporal this morning publishes a rumor that Prince Louis Napoleon, Governor General of the Caucasus, has been assassinated at Tiflis.

There is no confirmation of this rumor from official or other sources.

Prince Louis Napoleon was the second son of the late Prince Jerome Napoleon and Princess Clothilde. He was born in 1864. His movements in the last few years have been of especial interest to France in view of the fact that, next to his brother, Prince Victor, he is the head of the Bonaparte family, although he has never declared by word or action that he had any plans against France. His prominence in Russian affairs created a feeling of real affection for him among the French people.

For many years he was a Lieutenant Colonel in one of the Czar's crack cavalry regiments at Nijni-Novgorod. In 1890 he was promoted to the command of a dragoon regiment at Warsaw. In 1898 he was Colonel of the Czarina's Lancers.

Prince Louis is liked better than his elder brother, Prince Victor. From his father, Prince Jerome, he inherited a large fortune.

MINISTER POWELL QUITS.

New Envoy to Haiti to be Dr. Furniss, an Indianapolis Negro.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The resignation of William F. Powell as Minister to Haiti has been submitted to the President and accepted.

As his successor the President has determined upon Dr. H. W. Furniss of Indianapolis, a prominent negro.

Dr. Furniss is at present Consul at Bahia, Brazil. He will assume his duties as Minister to Haiti about Nov. 15.

Mr. Powell has, it is understood, resigned voluntarily. His position has been unenviable and full of excitement. Some time ago he was quoted as saying that he was going to resign because he had been shot at a few times, and did not enjoy it. Subsequently he denied this interview.

He has been practically persona non grata for some time. Over a year ago he informed this Government that disturbances were expected and that Haiti might not be strong enough to preserve order. He asked for a warship, which was sent. Haiti was indignant and registered a protest, not because he had predicted riots, but because he had impugned the republic's ability to cope with them. The Haitians are sensitive on that subject. It was generally understood that but for Haiti's unwillingness to take a decided stand against a power so much stronger, Mr. Powell's recall would have been asked for then.

In addition to this, Mr. Powell has protected some foreigners whom the Haitians are desirous of expelling from their country, and in other ways has had clashes with the little Government.

BITES FOOTBALL PLAYER.

In Melee Trinity Man Sets Teeth in Capt. Cragin of N. Y. U.

Special to The New York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., Oct. 14.—In a game full of sensational features Trinity and New York University played each other to a tie to-day. In a hot mêlée following Connell's failure to kick a field goal for New York from the thirty-yard line Capt. Cragin of New York was bitten by a Trinity player. The supporters of the New York team were also much incensed at the decision of the umpire, who certainly appeared to favor the local team, and it is practically certain that New York University will break off all athletic relations with the Hartford team, following the example of Wesleyan.

The game had few features outside of the free fight in which Cragin was bitten.

SPECIAL TRAIN FOR NEGRO.

He Had a Through Ticket and Railroad Had to Carry Him.

Special to The New York Times.

REHOBOTH, Del., Oct. 14.—A special train for a solitary negro passenger was run last night over the Delaware Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad from Lewes to Rehoboth.

The negro had purchased a through ticket to Rehoboth in Philadelphia, but as the Summer season is over there was no regular evening train. He insisted on being carried to his destination, and the special was run.

The Winter residents gathered at the station as the special drew in, thinking that a visitor of distinction was coming. They were amazed when the single passenger alighted.

JAIL TERM FOR WILLIAMSON.

Congressman and Two Accomplices in Land Frauds Sentenced.

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 14.—John Newton Williamson, Congressman from the Second Oregon District, convicted of subornation of perjury in connection with land frauds in Oregon, was sentenced by Judge Hunt in the United States Court to-day to serve ten months in the County Jail and pay a fine of $500. He also was reprimanded by the court for his failure to set a good example in exalted public office.

Similar penalty was imposed on Marion R. Biggs, formerly United States Commissioner. In the case of Dr. Van Gesner, convicted of being a fellow-conspirator in subornation of perjury, the prison term, because of the defendant's age and feebleness, was reduced one-half and the fine was doubled. Van Gesner was Williamson's partner in the sheep business.

Appeals are pending and stay of execution was obtained. Meanwhile Williamson will go free on his own recognizance, a bond of $4,000 being required of each of the others.

SUES FOR $2,241,410 TAXES.

Union Central Life Insurance Company of Ohio Defendant.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 14.—In the Superior Court to-day, Rudolph K. Hynicka, as Treasurer of Hamilton County, filed an action for alleged tax arrearages against the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of which John M. Pattison, Democratic candidate for Governor, is President. The amount asked for is $2,241,410.64 and interest.

This action, coupled with a similar action, filed in August, 1903, makes the company defendant in the Hamilton County courts for $2,500,000 in round numbers.

Mr. Pattison is away campaigning, but at his office it was said to-day he had been ready to meet the first case all along in court, but had had no opportunity to do so, as it had not been pressed.

DEAL ON WITH HEARST TO INJURY OF IVINS

Republican Leaders Trying to Save Their Assemblymen.

WHAT DO THEY GIVE FOR IT?

Must Be Support for the Hearst City Ticket—How Gruber Won Against Jerome.

Several Republican leaders have opened negotiations with the Hearst forces for the indorsement of the Republican candidates for Assemblymen and Aldermen.

The effect of such indorsements cannot but be prejudicial to the Republican Mayoralty candidate, William M. Ivins. The Republican district leaders who are seeking indorsements from the Hearst people admit that fact, but plead as an excuse that the Republican city campaign haa been already so seriously hurt by the delay in securing a Mayoralty candidate that they feel that desperate action on their part is necessary to give them a chance against Tammany Hall in their district fights.

Although Mr. Ivins bowed to the superior wisdom of the district leaders in the decision to turn down Jerome, it was said yesterday that some lively comments would probably be forthcoming from him if the Republican-Hearst district deals went through.

Of course, the Hearst people are not indorsing Republican candidates for the Assembly and Aldermen without some assurances that the Hearst city ticket will be helped in return. It is a fact that some of the Republican district leaders are very much disgruntled over the turn of affairs in their organization. They feel that proper consideration was not shown to them by the heads of the organization.

The Hearst people are disposed to take advantage of this feeling of resentment. Already agreements have been made in two districts between the Hearst managers and the Republican leaders, by which the Hearst League will indorse the Republican candidates for Assembly and Alderman in those districts.

Among the Republicans yesterday a report was circulated that the Citizens' Union would indorse the candidacy of William M. Ivins for Mayor. An authoritative denial was issued last evening by officials of the union. It was said that the Citizens' Union will not indorse either Mr. Ivins or any other Mayoralty candidate.

When the Union withdrew from Fusion it was formally announced that all of its energies in the campaign would be devoted to the re-election of Mr. Jerome. At that time it was regarded aa not improbable that Mr. Jerome would have the indorsements of all organizations. That he would be rejected by the Republicans was considered quite unlikely, despite ths hostile feeling of many of the leaders to his candidacy. Now that Mr. Jerome is left without any indorsement except that of the Citizens' Union, the officers of that organization feel that it is more than ever incumbent upon them to give all their attention to Mr. Jerome's canvass.

There was a good deal of discussion yesterday about the lengths to which the Republican Convention went in repudiating Mr. Jerome. Charles A. Flammer, the candidate named against him, is a resident of Abraham Gruber's district, and presided over the Assembly convention held in that district last Monday. Col. Gruber was the friend of Armitage Mathews, Secretary of the Republican County Committee, who committed suicide on the morning on which he was to have been brought to trial by Mr. Jerome on a charge of conspiracy to loot the Weisel estate. It was Gruber who was one of the most bitter opponents of Jerome's indorsement by the Republicans. His victory was complete. He had Jerome turned down, and his own candidate nominated for District Attorney.

From one of the leaders who took part in the conference of Republican leaders at the Fifth Avenue Hotel last Friday, at which the rejection of Jerome for District Attorney was decided upon, it was learned yesterday that the principal speech against Jerome was made by Edward Lauterbach. It was said that Mr. Lauterbach gave the conference the full story of his efforts to bring Judge Gaynor and Mr. Jerome together for the purpose of making a fight against Tammany. Mr. Lauterbach said that Mr. Jerome rejected all overtures made to him. Mr. Jerome was quoted as having said:

"Why should I tie myself up to any single organization? My baggage will be decorated with the labels of all of them before I set sail in this campaign."

Mr. Ivins decided yesterday to open personal campaign headquarters in the Hotel Breslin, at Twenty-ninth Street and Broadway, next Monday. He expects to enter upon his campaign at once. He said yesterday that he felt confident of his election. Asked if he had any special reason for his confidence, he said:

"I believe the undercurrent is with me."

William Halpin, Chairman of the Republican County Committee, on whom has fallen the chief share of the labor of making up the ticket, went out of town yesterday to rest over Sunday.

Republican Club to Hear Ivins.

William M. Ivins, Republican candidate for Mayor, will speak at the monthly meeting of the Republican Club, 56 West Fortieth Street, to-morrow evening.

RUNAWAY IN PROSPECT PARK.

It Follows a Collision Between Buggies—Two Hurt.

James McDonald of 1,012 Pacific Street and William O'Rourke of 612 Classon Avenue, Brooklyn, were driving a buggy along Prospect Park's East Drive yesterday afternoon, when they were run into by a man who was driving a big black horse attached to a heavy buggy.

Their vehicle was overturned by the force of the collision, and both men were thrown heavily to the roadway. Their horse ran away and caused a scattering of carriages on the drive. The runaway was caught by a mounted policeman, after a short chase.

McDonald received a fracture of the wrist, and was taken to Seney Hospital. O'Rourke was bruised about the body. The man who ran into them, when he saw that he had upset their buggy, whipped up his horse and drove off at a furious pace.

JOE JEFFERSON'S ESTATE.

Value of Real and Personal Property in This State $130,929.

The appraisal of the property left by Joseph Jefferson, the actor, who died last April in Florida, was filed in the Surrogate's office yesterday.

He left real estate in New York worth $115,000, and personal property of the estimated value of $21,520. From the latter item must be deducted the expenses of administration and other disbursements, aggregating $5,591. This leaves the total value net of the personal and real property in this State $130,929.

HE BURNED $4,900 IN STAMPS.

Postmaster at Montgomery Must Pay for His Carelessness.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Oct. 14.—A shortage of $4,900 in the Montgomery Post Office is explained by Postmaster Wilkin by the statement that he burned stamps to that amount with rubbish when cleaning out the office in September.

Inspectors have demanded that the bondsmen pay the loss and take charge of the office. They decline to do so. The Postmaster has until Monday to settle.

TWENTY BALLOONS TO RACE.

To Start from the Tuileries Gardens To-day—One American Entry.

PARIS, Oct. 14.—Twenty balloons will start from the Tuileries Gardens to-morrow in an international contest. Count de la Vaulx and many leading aeronauts from France, Germany, Austria, and Belgium will participate.

There is one American entry. Frank Larms, with his balloon Katherine Hamilton.

B. AND O. EXPRESS WRECKED.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Oct. 14.—The "Royal" train on the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railroad, west-bound, was wrecked near Springfield to-night, killing Mrs. John Musch of Virginia, Ill., and seriously injuring Mrs. James Gardner, J. D. Tippett, and Mrs. William Lynd, all of Illinois. Several other passengers were hurt.

Through failure of a derailing switch to work, two cars of coal had run partly on the main track from a mine switch. The locomotive of the passenger train scraped the coal cars, but the baggage car hit them squarely, knocking two passenger coaches and the baggage car off the track.

JEWELS IN HER STOCKINGS.

Woman Passenger on the Philadelphia Carried $1,000 Worth.

A woman passenger in the second cabin who arrived on the American liner Philadelphia yesterday attracted the attention of Acting Deputy Surveyor Norwood.

Mr. Norwood called her aside, and after a few minutes talk requested her to return to the ship with a woman Customs Inspector. She did so.

A VANDERBILT PURCHASE.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Get the Old Drayton Property at Hyde Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt bought yesterday, through Osgood Pell, the property formerly belonging to the Draytons, and more recently part of the Seton estate. The place adjoins the estate already owned by Mr. Vanderbilt, at Hyde Park-on-Hudson, which is the favorite home of Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt. The purchase gives the Vanderbilt estate a river frontage of several miles. The Vanderbilts now have the largest estate of any of their neighbors, among whom are Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Astor and Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills.

SEES END OF FEVER FIGHT.

New Orleans Staff Thinks Two Weeks More Will Suffice.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 14.—The yellow fever situation again showed improvement to-day, the new cases shrinking from the daily totala of a week ago. To-day marked the end of the thirteenth week of the fight against fevsr, and it is believed that the authorities will not be actively engaged for more than two weeks longer. There will be a general fumigation to-morrow.

The whole population has been urged to disinfect. Depots were opened to-day in every precinct for free distribution of sulphur.

To-morrow a number of towns and parishes will raise quarantine against New Orleans.

EARTHQUAKES IN ANTILLES.

Houses Damaged in Santiago—Shocks Felt All Over Jamaica.

SANTIAGO, Cuba, Oct. 14.—A severe earthquake shock this morning, following a slight shock yesterday, has caused general alarm.

Several houses were damaged by the disturbance to-day, but no one was injured.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Oct. 14.—Two earthquake shocks of unusual duration and affecting the whole of Jamaica were felt here this week.

The first shock was on Thuraday evening and lasted nearly a minute. The second and more severe occurred to-day and lasted for a minute and a half.

The undulating motion of the ground made some persons ill. There was no damage to property.

MORE SHOCKS IN ITALY.

Considerable Damage to Property—People Panic-Stricken.

MILAN, Oct. 14.—Dispatches received here from Reggio, Monteleone, and Messina say that further violent earthquake shocks have occurred, and that considerable damage has been done to property.

The dispatches add that the people are panic-stricken.

Fall from a Train Was Fatal.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., Oct. 14.—Robert C. Thurkell of Coscob, a bookkeeper employed in New York, died in the Stamford Hospital at 5 this morning. Mr. Thurkell alighted from a train before it came to a standstill in the station at Coscob, and had a bad fall. He was 68 years old.

VANDERBILT RACE WON BY HEMERY

Frenchman in Darracq Car Captures the Trophy

LANCIA LOST BY ILL-LUCK

When 30 Miles Ahead His Machine Is Wrecked.

BEAT A MILE A MINUTE

A low, black car, with a thin trail of blue vapor and snorting from its vent pipe with the terrific intensity of a rapid-fire gun in full action, flew over the finish line on the Jericho Turnpike eight minutes before 11 o'clock yesterday morning at the rate of more than a mile a minute amid the accompaniment of wild cheers and waving flags and handkerchiefs that meant that the great automobile race of 1905 for the cup presented by W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., had been run and won. The winning car was an eighty horse power Darracq, driven by the Frenchman, Hemery, and had covered the 283 miles of the oil-soaked course in 4 hours 36 minutes and 8 seconds, an average speed of about sixty-one and a half miles an hour.

Thirty-two seconds behind the winner the second car, a Panhard, boomed over the finish line. It, too, was made in France, with all its appurtenances, waa of one hundred and twenty horse power, and was driven by George Heath, who won the first Vanderbilt Cup race a year ago, and who for a time appeared likely to duplicate his good fortune yesterday. But, though separated only by seconds from the winner, Heath started three minutes ahead of Hemery, who, therefore, beat him by 3 minutes and 32 seconds.

Behind the two Frenchmen came Joe Tracy, driving a 90-horse-power Locomobile, the only member of the American team of five who finished. Tracy took 4 hours, 58 minutes, and 26 seconds for the 283 miles, and made a fine finish after an unpromising beginning. Fourth and last to finish out of the nineteen starters came Lancia, the Italian, who drove a 120-horse-power Fiat, and who, though beaten by an unfortunate accident, was really the hero of the day. There will be more to say of him later on.

Many Small Mishaps.

It was a day of alternate exhilaration, of hope and depression, of hair breadth escapes by the "S" turn and the Guinea Road, of burst tires and lost pins and broken cranks and cracked cylinders, of upsets and perilous, dizzy shaving of dangerous spots—in short, a day of coquetting with sudden death, but every man who started in the race emerged from it with no broken bones, and though a few were injured, no serious injuries were reported.

Of all the thirty-eight drivers and mechanicians who risked their lives in the race, Foxhall P. Keene has probably the most cause for gratitude at escaping with his life. At the time of his accident Mr. Keene was pressing hard on Lancia's heels, and was much in advance of Hemery. At the "S" turn, at the end of the Guinea Woods, he pulled out a bit to let another car go by and then resumed his speed so quickly that the car got beyond control and skidded off the side of the road, one wheel colliding with a telegraph pole.

Though neither Mr. Keene nor his mechanician was hurt, the big 120 horse-power Mercedes racer he waa driving was too badly smashed to keep it in the race. Lytle, one of the American team, spilled his mechanician out at a sharp turn, but the man reported "not damaged" and continued the race. Christie, another of the American team, was not so lucky. After his smash with Lancia, both he and his mechanician got a bad spill, and the mechanician had to be carried from the track, though the doctors say he was not dangerously hurt.

Lancia's Tremendous Speed.

A world's record for road racing that would have far outdistanced any previously made would surely have been made by Lancia, the Italian, had not he and Christie got tangled up on the back of the course, when Lancia was about half way around on his eighth lap. Up to that time the Italian, with his huge 120 horse power car, had been driving with a speed and skill, a recklessness tempered with cool judgment and nerves of iron, that had amazed every beholder. Starting in fourth place, he was second the first time he reappeared at the grand stand. At the end of his second lap he was first, and he was not headed again until the accident.

So dazzling was the speed at which the Italian reeled off the miles that he had finished his seventh round before anybody else had finished his sixth, and it was plain that nothing but a serious accident could possibly beat him. At the end of his seventh lap he had covered 198 miles in 170 minutes.

This means that he had been sending his machine along, curves and all, at an average speed of a fraction less than 70 miles an hour. To do this he must frequently have been traveling on the long two and three mile straightaways at anywhere from 85 to 90 miles an hour. At the end of the seventh lap there was practically only one man in the race and his name was Lancia. Then presto! a little error of judgment on somebody's part and the laurels are gone beyond recall. This is how it happened:

Lancia had been having some tire trouble on his eight round, which had so materially decreased his speed that he stopped at his station near Albertson's to remedy the difficulty. This was accomplished in a brief time, mechanicians and their assistants working frantically to do it, and then they hustled the racer out on the track again.

As Lancia emerged a speck appeared far up the track. But in automobile racing a speck on the horizon will be a howling locomotive under your nose in a second or so.

"Car coming," shouted scores of voices.

But Lancia thought he could get under way in time to keep ahead. He was wrong. He turned on his car to the limit, but it was in vain. The American car driven by Christie was upon him. Christie jammed on his brakes with all his might, till every bolt and nut and pin and wheel in the powerful structure cried out in agonized protest. It seemed that something must break, but nothing did. The Christie car swung round and round like a dervish in a dance, its rear wheels striking the rear wheels of the Italian car and slicing a tire squarely in half. Lancia and his mechanician managed to hang on to their machine, but Christie and his assistant were spilled out and considerably bruised. Christie's car was permanently disabled, and Lancia lost so much time in getting another tire that it ruined his chances for success. It was a bitter blow to the gay Italian and a disappointment to thousands of the spectators with whom he had become a favorite.

But even with Lancia out, the going was fast enough, as appears from a comparison with the time made in other big road races in the last two years. George Heath's time a year ago on Long Island was only 52.4 miles an hour. Thery made only 47.63 miles an hour for the Bennett Cup over the Auvergne circuit. Hemery, however, yesterday's winner, made slightly better time—62.34 miles an hour last Spring over the Ardennes circuit.

Race May Be the Last.

As good many people think that yesterday's race will be the last big automobile road race ever held in this country. The Vanderbilt Cup, at any rate, is lost to America. Mr. Vanderbilt stipulated that the first two races for it must be held in this country. This condition has now been fulfilled, and the cup goes to France, not to return until an American-built machine wins it back.

Probably 100,000 persons saw the racers at some part or other of their dizzy circuit, and if there is never another big road race for the distance-annihilators on Long Island it will not be because the sport is not popular. At least 50,000 of these spectators got up in the middle of the night or sat up all night in order to journey from New York to the level reaches of Long Island. New York never goes to bed, it is true, but it was particularly wakeful Friday night and Saturday morning. At the hour when the big hotels are usually quiet all was bustle and eagerness. Breakfast was served at most of them as early as 2 o'clock. At the Waldorf-Astoria particularly, the racegoers were early astir, and the shouting of cabmen and chauffeurs resounded through the street and avenue.

From 3 o'clock to 5, Thirty-fourth Street was alive with cabs, motor cars, and pedestrians, all bound for the Long Island ferries, while the empty cañon of lower Broadway resounded to the toots of machines bound for Mineola by way of Brooklyn. The foot of East Thirty-fourth Street looked long before daylight as it usually looks early in the afternoon of a big race day at Belmont Park, while over every avenue of the city, from the Battery to the Harlem, big cars were booming through the darkness to the race.

Trains Broke No Records.

The earlier comers had by far the better of it. It is a trifle over eighteen miles from Long Island City, (which, it will be remembered, is a bit further than the classic distance between Schenectady and Troy,) and the average running time of the Long Island Railroad yesterday morning was an hour and a quarter, or at the rate of about twelve miles an hour. It will be observed that the automobile has the call. But the trains, slow as they were, were full when they left Long Island City, and packed when they pulled out of Jamaica, it being the ingenious arrangement to run a full train from Brooklyn and pack its passengers into another full train at Jamaica. Meantime, hundreds of automobiles were humming over every available road that led to Mineola. Arrived there they made for the motor headquarters on either side of the finish line, where they were packed in spaces reserved for them. Everybody made haste to get into the particular point of vantage he had selected from which to view the race before 5:30, for at that hour the course itself was to be closed to public use and turned over entirely to the racing authorities.

The earliest comers at Mineola, of course, were the legions who had come down the day before and spent the night at Garden City and its environs. They were early for two reasons. First, they wanted the choice places, and, second, they were much more comfortable in the open air than where they had spent the night. Hundreds slept on cots in halls, in hay lofts, on billiard tables, sitting up in armchairs, or even on campstools. Hundreds more preferred to try and get a little sleep sitting in their machines, of which there were several hundred in Garden City.

Prices were genuine sky-scrapers, and many a millionaire refused to be held up and spent the night roaming about under the open sky. But all the hold-up men were so busy that they didn't miss them.

It was the busiest dawn that Mineola ever saw. With 6 o'clock set absolutely as the hour for getting the first racer off the mark, thousands thought it advisable to be at the start before daylight. After that they kept on coming for hours. They piled off the trains before they had come to a stop, swarmed over plowed fields and through the corn stubble, and hurdled fences in their haste to see the send-off. Most of them succeeded, and it was a gay and expectant throng that overflowed the grandstands and lined up ten deep along the Jericho turnpike, not many minutes after the sun rose upon the Long Island fields.

Persons who follow automobile racing know very well and others will now be interested to learn that the Vanderbilt Cup course from Mineola to Mineola is 28.3 miles long, and that the competing cars were required to make this circuit ten times. It is a good course or not, according as the car you favored was successful or unsuccessful. That it is not among the slowest is proved beyond a doubt by the phenomenal flight of speed maintained for seven-tenths of the race by Lancia and the very high average made by the three first cars.

Straightaway at the Start.

From the start to the Jericho turnpike it stretches straightaway, with never a turn or zig-zag to shake the nerve or slacken the speed for 6.35 miles. Here it was that the daring racers sent the machines along at their fastest yesterday. From the Jericho turnpike to East Norwich, a distance of three miles and a half, the going is fairly straight only, but the following five miles and a half, when the racers turned west, is as good as the best.

Then comes a three-mile stretch, much of which is nervous traveling, narrow and heavily shaded, with the evil "S" turn at its end. Four miles of pretty straight traveling brings the driver to the Lakeville turn, where many a motorist has come to grief, but once straightened out to the south it is plain sailing for three miles to Hyde Park, where the course turns to the east and in two miles and a half brings the motor to the finish.

Over this course the cars flashed again and again, most of the time through wavering lines of human faces and figures. It was a living wall with movable sides that opened and closed at the magic, monotonous cry that all forenoon flashed around the course, a vocal endless chain: "Car coming!"

Looking up any one of the different straightways one could see those walls give and rebound as the racers shot between them, as if each car were equipped with an invisible wedge a quarter of a mile long, with which it smoothly plowed its way through human clods. The middle of the road possessed an apparently irresistible attraction for the average spectator, for "Car coming!" was the only thing that would keep him out of it.

Jenatzy First at Start.

The crowd at the starting line craned its collective neck as never before, when a few minutes before 6 o'clock, Jenatzy slowly rolled his big 120-horse-power Mercedes toward the mark. The powerful car stood shivering and shuddering nervously as if impatient to be off and cleaving the air on its long journey of peril. Promptly at 6 o'clock the starter's pistol cracked, and with a roar the Mercedes bounded into life, shot down the avenue of red flags and warning cries, and disappeared in the distance. Almost before the crowd realized it the big race was on.

Duray, the Frenchman, in his big blue De Dietrich, followed his traditional rival one minute later, and, after him, Dingley, with his 60-horse-power Pope-Toledo, was the first American to be sent away. Lancia, as No. 4, was the first Italian off the mark, and after him came Foxhall P. Keene, so begoggled and beheimeted that if disguise could have concealed his identity nobody could have known him.

But as Mr. Vanderbilt stepped alongside the Mercedes to shake hands with its driver, as he did with each contestant before sending him away, a ripple of applause ran over the grandstand, led by the occupants of the Vanderbilt box, who included, in addition to Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., the Duchess of Marlborough, who was the observed of all observers; Mrs. Hollis H. Hunnewell, Mrs. Perry Tiffany, Mr. and Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, and James W. Gerard. The crowd took up the applause until Mr. Keene acknowledged the demonstration with a friendly little wave of the hand. The next instant he was nothing but a silver smudge down the turnpike.

Wagner, with his Darracq; Tracy, with his Locomobile, and Nazzaro, with his Fiat, were the next three away, at intervals of a minute. Then came Warden, with a Mercedes; Szisz, (pronounce it "Selze" if you wish to do the proper thing,) with his Renault, which was promptly christened the "Red Beetle." Christie did not get away in eleventh place, as he should have done, and Cedrino, of the Italian team, followed the Frenchman with the name that sounds like a racing motor under full headway.

Campbell, Heath, last year's winner, and Lytle, the American driver, followed in the order named. Campbell was superstitious, and wouldn't take No. 13, so they called him and his Mercedes "X," which, as everybody knows, is an unknown quantity. Chevrolet, the Italian, who drove a Fiat, like all his fellow-countrymen, was next away, with Hemery and his 80-horse-power Darrack. White, with the only steam machine in the race, and Sartori, driving Alfred G. Vanderbilt's 90-horse-power Fiat, completed the list.

It was then twenty minutes after 6 and the crowd on the grandstand settled down to wait for a few minutes—it might be five, it might be three, or even two—nobody knew.

It was a short wait. From afar off up the narrow turnpike there floated the mellow note of a bugle, taken up by the grand stand bugler as soon as he heard it.

"Car coming!" roared the flagmen. Then the road broke out into a storm of red flags, while the spectators bent from their seats to catch their first view of a racer as he flashed toward them through the level rays of the morning sun. Some vast invisible sponge wiped from the turnpike the human smear of black that had covered it, and its oil-soaked surface gleamed dully in view. Suddenly, where the road converged to the vanishing point there leaped into sight a speck. With the speed of light it slipped through the living lane till it was no longer a speck but a thunderbolt. With a roar that drowned the cries of the multitude it flashed past the grand stand. In an instant it melted down the turnpike—its hoarse voice died to a distant murmur—it was again a speck—it was gone.

"No. 1," droned the announcer through his megaphone, and the throng knew that Jenatzy, first away, had kept his position, making the first round of the race in 24 minutes 52 seconds.

Lancia Whizzes by.

Almost before you could fill up your again, the voice of a nascent cyclone gently stirred the air from some point ineffably far away. In two deep breaths the monster was almost upon you. You leaned over the rail and fixed your eyes upon the flying apparition to get its number. It looked like the two extremes of the numbers on the oculist's time card time card, it seemed, the bugle blew—microscopic one instant, a second later, huge, overpowering, vast—and it was No. 4. Lancia had overtaken Duray, had passed Dingley, somewhere, no one knew just where, and was bounding through space like a young comet, on the heels of Jenatzy, who alone headed him.

From that time on they came so fast and furious that the edge of the sensation soon became a trifle dulled, but for the uninitiated it was exceedingly sharp at first. Not one of those hardy, cool gamblers with Fate who flew through the cool of the morning, faster than any wind save a hurricane, but knew he was taking his life in his hands. Not one of the spectators but knew that death lurked very close—perhaps just around that curve or in the middle of that straightaway. Not a soul of them all but knew that a second's dizziness, a fraction of a second's delay in the turn of a wrist, a stray dog on the track, might hurl some human being into the next world. But it is surprising how soon humanity forgets its perils. Before the day was two hours advanced, that warning cry, "Car coming," failed to arouse that same breathless interest with which it had earlier been greeted.

There was a flutter of consternation when the announcer informed the throng that "White is out at Bull's Head on the first round." It was a bad omen that an American car should be the first disabled.

Tire of Wagner's Car Burst.

But there was excitement enough to come—yes, and to spare. As Wagner howled by the stand at the end of his second round, driving his eighty horse-power Darracq, right under the eyes of the select of the motoring world, there was a report like that of a gun, as the tire on the off rear wheel blew up. A cry of fear went up, the huge car rocked and swerved most perilously, and its occupants crouched as if they feared the worst. But Wagner did not lose his head.

In an instant—he had no more time than that—Wagner had his car in the middle of the track and pulled it up, unharmed, a quarter of a mile further on. But it was the beginning of the end for Wagner.

Then followed almost immediately what was to the occupants of the grand stand by far the most thrilling moment of the day. All leaped up in their places when the cry went up: "Two cars coming."

And coming they were, side by side, as far up the road as the eye could reach. No one knew what cars they were, for their progress had not been traced, but as the pair flew into the little dip in the road half a mile above the stand, the peculiar color and conformation of one of the pair told the crowd that it was the "Red Beetle," with the Frenchman, Szisz, at the steering wheel. A moment later a huge "5" was made out upon the other machine and "Keene! Keene!" roared the throng.

It was a dazzling and nerve-racking spectacle. The Frenchman had come from behind, and as the road was none too wide, Mr. Keene dared not yield too much of it. But Szisz would not be denied. He took all there was of the road on his side, and for an instant it looked as if he might be going to take a little more. As the pair boomed under the wire, traveling at the rate of at least sixty-five miles an hour, there was no advantage between them that the eye could detect.

"You couldn't have put a sheet o' paper between 'em," shouted one enthusiast, as soon as he could get his breath.

It wasn't quite as near a thing as that, but it is certain that Mr. Keene's mechanician could have touched the French chauffeur without extending his arm to its full length. Well, it wasn't any occasion for a time exposure. They were gone in the twinkling of an eye, and, much to the surprise of more than a few, both still alive. A quarter of a mile beyond the stand the "Red Bectle" let out an extra link and crept ahead. Everybody felt relieved as they vanished up the turnpike.

"Three and Seven passed Hyde Park together," cried the announcer, and all hands got ready for another neck and neck dash right under their very eyes, Hyde Park being the beginning of the long straightaway that led past the grand stand and over which the greatest flights of speed were attained all day long.

But this time there was disappointment. Three and seven, Dingley and Tracy, two of the American team, did not come by together for the reason that Tracy, soon after Hyde Park had died out behind him, passed Dingley and was first by the starting point by quite a considerable margin.

"Four leads at Bull's Head," was the next announcement to stir the crowd.

This meant that with the leaders still on their third round, Lancia, the Italian, with his Fiat, had caught and passed Jenatzy with his Mercedes somewhere along the Benzine Boulevard. At once everybody began to wonder whether anything serious had happened to the German, and visions of collisions and smashes into telegraph poles began to be conjured up.

Cheers Greet Italian.

Before any of these fears could be set at rest the White steamer which had been reported broken down, came by so slowly that it was plain it was not in good condition. Then came the announcement that Lancia had passed Hyde Park. In a trice he came booming down the turnpike in one of his most magnificent flights of speed. It was his first appearance in the actual lead, and a howl of delight as he swept by did its best to inform him that the spectators were mindful of the honor. The burly Italian heard and raised one hand in token of his pleasure. Before he could pull it down again he was almost out of sight. The Italian had covered 85 miles in 71 minutes.

When Duray followed a few moments after, as he shot past the stand, a streak of white appeared on the roadway behind him as if by magic. An official stooped and picked up a bag that had been dropped from the machine. It contained soapstone, which explained the apparition. Soapstone is used in certain kinds of automobile repairs. Hard on the heels of Duray came Szisz, with a noise that sounded as his name looks if it should be pronounced. Crouching low over his wheel, his mechanician almost hidden behind the windbreak, the Frenchman was driving his "Red Beetle" like the wind itself, and everywhere were heard remarks that showed the daring driver to be regarded as a big factor in the race.

But fast as he flew Foxhall Keene was not far behind, so near, in fact, that any mishap to the Frenchman would have let the American past him again.

Heath's Flying Salute.

The vanishing number told you it was Heath this time, though you didn't need to see the number if you saw him raise his right hand to his cap in a stiff military salute each time he thundered past the grand stand. He never failed to remember his friends in this manner right up to the moment when he flew over the finish line second in the race.

Wagner got a little cheer as he came by for the first time after repairing his burst tire. He had scarcely disappeared when Lancia boomed by again all unannounced. As he passed the judges it is safe to say that he was traveling at the rate of ninety miles an hour. This was the finish of his fourth lap, which was the fastest lap made by any driver in the race. Lancia covered the 28.3 miles this time in 23 minutes and 18 seconds, making an average speed of 73½ miles an hour.

As the Italian flashed by, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., scrambled to the rail of the box and stood on it, while a friend supported her there, watching the bounding Fiat car until it faded from view. Everybody, in fact, knew that there was then on exhibition a turn of speed such as had never before been seen in a road race in this or any other country.

Some excitement was caused by the appearance of William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., in his automobile, with the doctor by his side. Mr. Vanderbilt hurried around to see if Lytle's assistant was badly hurt, and soon came back with favorable news. The crowd sighed a bit as Dingley was announced to have cracked a cylinder and retired from the race. The Americans were not getting on well. Everybody was looking for Lancia when he finished his fifth round, still flashing by, cometlike, at that terrific speed.

The big Italian was sitting up very straight, and you could see enough of his face to know that it wore a smile. The Fiat was a quarter of an hour ahead of its nearest rival and gaining steadily. Nobody else was holding that breathless speed.

The final retirement of the White steamer from the race was told by the announcer in these words:

"No. 10 has gone into the barn at Bull's Head."

"Into the pond, did you say?" inquired a joker. But the laughter was smothered in applause when the announcement came:

"Tattersall, Lytle's mechanician not hurt."

The applause died away in a hum of wonder while the announcer gave Lancia's time for his fifth superb round—23 minutes and 45 seconds. That the patriotic spirit was strong in the crowd was evidenced when Tracy got a burst of cheers as he flashed past at the end of his fourth round just after Lancia had ended his fifth.

Then came the practical elimination of a car that up to that time promised to give the best of them a hard time. The unfortunate car was none other than the "Red Beetle." The insect limped into sight under its usual speed and pulled up a quarter of a mile below the stand with serious trouble somewhere in its insides. It recuperated under skillful treatment sufficiently to continue its flight, but it was never the same old insect again.

Meantime nothing had been heard of Jenatzy since he finished his third round close on Lancia's heels. Just as the crowd was beginning to fear that some accident had befallen him which was being suppressed, word came through the telephone that he had cracked a cylinder at Bull's Head, and was out of the race.

A Blow to German Hopes.

This news was a crushing blow to the partisans of the Germans, for Jenatzy, who is one of the most resourceful and cool drivers of motor cars in the world, and who won the Gordon Bennett Cup in 1903, was regarded as the mainstay of the Teutons. With him out, it was feared that even with Mr. Keene still going well no Mercedes car would be in at the finish.

In the meantime the unfortunate Jenatzy was sitting, miles away, in his disabled car, planted in a ditch at the side of the road, whence he waved a sorrowful encouragement to his team mates as they flashed by him one after another.

"No. 5 went into a telegraph pole at Willis Avenue," shouted the megaphonic voice. A wave of horror seemed to sweep the crowd, for No. 5 meant Foxhall Keene. But the cheerful "No one hurt" that followed set the smiles going again, though it was feared that this would put Mr. Keene out of the race as, indeed, it did. This, however, was another blow for the German contingent, putting their two best representatives, Jenatzy and Keene, out of the contest.

When that magic No. 4 loomed and boomed down the track for the sixth time, still reeling off the miles in somewhere around fifty seconds each, and with no record of trouble of any kind, word was passed around that the race was practically over. And so, in fact, it appeared. And when the huge Italian flashed by for the seventh time it became certain that, barring accidents, the winner was seated in that Fiat car. For Lancia had a clear lead over his nearest rival, who at that time was Heath.

He had, in fact, finished his seventh round before anybody else had finished

SIMPSON CRAWFORD CO., SELLING AGENTS FOR THE CELEBRATED KUPPENHEIMER CLOTHING.

COPYRIGHT 1905 BY THE HOUSE OF KUPPENHEIMER

OVERCOATS

THE HOUSE OF KUPPENHEIMER, celebrated for their custom made clothing, has come forward with a clothing business proposition that will be of interest to every well dressed man.

It concerns their custom made Winter Overcoats, for which the regular prices in the best clothing houses in America are 35.00 and 40.00.

To inaugurate the season in New York, they have allowed Simpson Crawford Co. as their selling agents

22.50 500 of these coats to be sold beginning Monday at 22.50.

Each little detail about which men are most particular—the collar, the shoulder, the lapel, the padding, the lining, etc., has the attention of a specialist. Ten masters of the tailoring art impart their skill and experience to each garment, while in a merchant tailor's shop where you'd pay at least 50.00, the coat is tailored from beginning to end by one craftsman. This may be satisfactory if you pay enough to enable the tailor to take his time, but the point we want to make is that you may be equally well satisfied with one of our $35.00 or $40.00 Kuppenheimer Overcoats at 22.50.

The materials are foreign Elysians, Vicunas, Smooth Kersey and other Overcoatings, that go into the high grade merchant tailored Coats—lined throughout with silk, satin or serge. The lot includes the new ultra fashionable styles in all sizes.

Surtout Coats.

We announced a number of 25.00 Winter Surtout Coats at 15.50 for Saturday, and sold all but ten or twelve, because they are the acme of style this season, many men were ready to purchase, and they found the values exactly as stated. We have another lot of one hundred for Monday.

Of course we don't mean they are $25.00 coats from the merchant tailor's standpoint. He would say $35.00 for such a coat. They have all the style, quality and cut of the best made-to-order surtout, and we offer them to-mrorow at less than the ready-for-service price $15.50

The fabrics are of Vicunas in Black. The close tight fitting collar—heavy lapels—form fitting waist and a full sweep to the skirt—give that most desired effect demanded by all fashionably dressed men. Own one of these $25.00 coats at $15.50.

Men's 15.00 new Fall suits and overcoats at 10.50. Thirty-four correct styles are included. 10.50

Men's new Winter overcoats, worth up to 25.00, and a superb line of ultra-fashionable Fall suits at 15.50

Boys' Clothing

6.50 suits and extra pair of pants — special 4.50

We bought 500 to sell with extra pants at 6.50, because they were unusually good values, but no sooner had they arrived than the manufacturer offered us one thousand more of the same quality at half price, and to-morrow they all go on sale at 4.50—1,700 suits.

The extra pair of pants makes each suit last as long as two ordinary $6.50 suits, and gives the boy a change of apparel, so he doesn't get tired of this suit. The style is a double-breasted Norfolk, with extra knicker trousers to match—sizes 7 to 16 years. You know how well all-wool worsteds and cheviots wear; well, these are the materials in fancy mixtures. Special school sale price.....$4.50

3.95 Boys' Winter OVERCOATS— size 7 to 16 at 3.95

Those long, flowing broad shoulder coats that make the boys feel like men—long enough to cover the shoe tops—single or double-breasted styles—made of high grade Vicuna in black and Oxford—certainly a remarkable value at $3.95.

THE FAMOUS TOURIST OVERCOAT FOR BOYS.

Every boy that requires a size of 9 to 16 years will look his best in one of these famous tourist coats. They're so popular that it is not unusual to pay $7.50 for this same style and quality.

4.95 Monday we place on sale 450 boys' tourist overcoats at 4.95 each.

Fancy Scotch effects. They embody all the new "wrinkles" that go to make up a stylish, up-to-date overcoat—finely tailored—belted back—sizes 9 to 16 years at 4.95.

his sixth, and had a margin of nearly half an hour, which, with the race more than two-thirds over, was considered extremely comfortable.

Time passed. Car after car hummed into a boom, boomed into a roar, boomed and hummed back to silence again. Twenty-five minutes went by. People began to ask where Lancia was. He had made no round in over 25 minutes before. When it got to be 30 minutes it was plain something had happened to the fearless Italian. Pretty soon word came: "No. 4 had tire trouble at Lakeville."

"That'll be all right," said all the Italian's friends. "He's got such a big lead. He can fix that tire in ten minutes." But the minutes went on until they grew to most alarming proportions. Finally Heath flew by for the eighth time and thereby took the lead. Hard on his trail came Hemery, another member of the French team. Watches were in many hands now, their owners trying to figure out whether it would be possible for Lancia to catch up if he came in five, in four, in three, yes—in two. But he came not and a sigh of regret went round as the announcer cried mournfully:

"No. 4 and No. 11 have been in collision near Willett's. Both machines disabled—no one hurt."

That seemed to settle it for Lancia, and the crowd felt more sympathetic for the Italian than for Christie, who drove No. 11, even though the latter was an American, since it was felt that Christie had no chance to win, while Lancia had every chance.

Another driver who, despite numerous troubles had thus far held on went out of business just then at Willis Avenue. It was Chevrolet, the Italian, whose big Fiat car broke an axle.

About the time that Heath and Hemery, the two leaders, were due, excitement ran high again. The two members of the French team were very close together the last seen of them and traveling very fast, with Heath in the lead.

Hemery in Front at Last.

But the next car that came down the turnpike was No. 18, and Hemery had at last taken the lead toward which he had been steadily forging for four long and perilous hours. He was still in sight, however, when Heath flashed into view, and it was plain that the latter still had a chance, especially should Hemery meet with accident.

"No. 4 passes Hyde Park!" roared the announcer. A little cheer went up. Lancia's friends had given him up. Now, it appeared, there was some hope after all. But when they did a little figuring they realized that a clear loss of over 40 minutes was almost sure to be fatal.

"Never mind," they said, "just you watch if you want to see some driving."

Their very words were borne away on the draught that followed their favorite as he swept by in one grand final burst of that marvelous speed that had in seven laps given him a clear lead of thirty miles or so. In the lap that followed the popular favorite almost succeeded in lifting himself by his bootstraps. In fact, he did lift himself from the sixth place, into which his delay had precipitated him, to third place, but Hemery and Heath kept piling on the speed. They had too big a lead. He could not catch them. No machine was ever built, no driver ever born, who could catch them in one more round. So he gave it up and was content with 30 miles in thirty-five minutes, or some such figure, for his last round.

But neither Hemery nor Heath let down a peg for that last round. Hemery had the lead, but he knew that a demon for speed and coolness was on his heels, and that if he hesitated in the least he might yet be beaten. So he piled on the speed afresh and took a little bigger chance at the curves.

Heath Was Close Behind.

But still came Heath almost within sound of his rival and frequently within sight of him. The telephone traced them around the course, past Bull's Head, past Willis Avenue, past Lakeville, almost together.

For the last time the cry goes up, "Two cars coming!"

Everybody thinks it is Hemery and Heath, neck and neck, together on the wire—but it isn't. It's Hemery, though, and just behind him Warden, in his Mercedes, though a lap or two behind.

Thirty-two seconds later it was when Heath boomed across the line in second place. He had lost twenty-four seconds on the last lap. Then all faces were turned up the road for Lancia. But he knew he was beaten and took his time, finishing just after 11 o'clock. As he loomed in sight up the track an official started up the middle of the road toward him waving frantically the yellow flag that signified that the race was over. The Italian saw him, shut off his engine, and came rolling easily to a standstill just under the wire.

There was not much cheering for Hemery when that knight of the goggles and the steering wheel swept over the line a winner of America's greatest road race, but for the beaten Lancia there was a perfect hurricane of cheers, and the instant he came to a standstill his machine was stormed by an army of admirers and sympathizers, who would practically have killed the driver with kindness had he not been mounted on such an unresponsive steed.

The big fellow was evidently very much disgusted with his luck, but he tried to smile at the cheers and the cries of "Bravo! Bravo! Bully for you, Lancia!" which were thrown at him from every side.

Crowd in Thunderbolt's Path.

Meantime the crowd had overflowed the track despite the fact that Tracy with his Locomobile was still loose up the road somewhere and likely to appear at 60 miles an hour almost any moment. It was an anxious moment for the officials who were most fearful that the carelessness of the multitude would mar the day with a frightful accident. Officials were sent scurrying up and down the road begging people to stand back for their lives. The dear people, however, seemed to think the officials were either having fun with them or trying to prevent them from ever getting home.

At any rate they declined to clear the track, and it was only when the sound of the bugle was heard that they consented to make room for Tracy's thunderbolt. The American driver came down to the wire full pelt, despite the yellow flag. But he shut off his power as soon as he saw the danger of accident below the finish, and the roaring of the machine scattered the throng, so that, unspeakably perilous as it looked, no one was hurt.

That ended the race. Sartori, Warden, Szisz, and Duray were still out on the course, but all the others had quit long since.

Then all the 1,000 autos that came to the races turned themselves loose in the track. In parallel columns they snorted and shook and shivered their way cautiously out to the various highways that lead from Mineola to the ends of the earth. An expert who saw them figured that all the machines near the race course yesterday, exclusive of the racers themselves, must have aggregated over $4,000,000 in value.

HOW LANCIA LOST LEAD WHEN 30 MILES AHEAD

Collision Disabled Machine and Destroyed His Chances.

VICTORY SEEMED TO BE HIS

The accident to Lancia which deprived him of the race happened when he was leading all his competitors by a margin approaching thirty miles. It cost him forty-three minutes. How it affected his speed after he resumed his driving no one can say. It did not seem that he was traveling any slower than he previously had, though without actual times for specific distances without stopping it would be impossible to say definitely. In the opinion of most of those who watched the final lap it is believed the accident had some effect in discouraging him at the finish when he saw his task of overhauling Hemery and Heath was hopeless.

He took the lead on the third lap after holding second place to Jenatzy for two rounds. He held it consistently from then until his accident, passing one after another of his competitors on every round, until in making the sixth round he passed the stands at the beginning and the end of the round without any of the leaders reaching the goal in the meantime. He then was easily thirty miles in advance of his nearest competitor.

On the way to Hyde Park, reaching his garage, he stopped to have his tires renewed. He had delayed some six minutes when the work was completed and he mounted his car to proceed. As he took his seat there was a cry, "Car coming!" and, looking back over his shoulder, he saw Christie approaching at high speed in his Christie. Beyond the point at which he stood the road narrows decidedly and winds, and it would be impossible for Lancia to pass a competitor. He was therefore eager to be off ahead of the oncoming racer. The wheels of the two cars interlocked. The contact was only for an instant, but it sufficed to rip the tire from the Fiat and bend the wheel so seriously that to proceed further was impossible.

The Christie car was also damaged, and the mechanician and driver both fell out as a result of the shock. Christie was not a bit hurt, but the assistant was shaken up and dazed. It was at first feared that he had been injured, but he was able to resume his place and aid in removing the American car from the course, as it was useless for it to proceed.

The Italian leaped from his machine, and the mechanician was beside him. Assistance was summoned, and the men went to work to repair the damage. The bent wheel, however, made its removal particularly difficult.

Meantime Lancia had been passed by Hemery, by Heath, by Nazarro, by Tracy, and by Szisz. He fell into sixth place, and went after the others at top speed. Szisz fell first to his fierce driving, then Nazarro, and then Tracy. He was back in third place and fast overhauling Hemery and Heath. But with only ninety miles to go the stern chase was too long a one, and, after entering the final round, it was apparent that his task was hopeless. Then Hemery and Heath gained on him, and Tracy, coming behind, although unable to pass him, still, stuck close enough to take third honors by reason of the advantage of three minutes which the Italian had at the start. He finished 55 seconds ahead, and lost the place by 2 minutes and 5 seconds actual time.

TWO SMASHES AT "S" CURVE.

Foxhall Keene and Chevrolet Try to Take It Too Fast.

Attracted by the possibilities of witnessing something in the way of a death-dealing accident at the "S" turn in the course at the junction of the Glen Cove and Willetts Roads, at Albertson, a great crowd congregated there early in the morning. In a measure they were not disappointed, for two of the most sensational smash-ups of the day took place at this point, and both put the cars out of the race. On the first time around all the cars took the turn at almost undiminished speed.

There was an amazing amount of skidding, and as the sand was hurled by shovelfuls from the surface of the road, the crowd became more impressed with the spectacle and the parked automobiles were moved back out of the danger zone so that the racers would have a comparatively clear way in the event of not being successful in making the turn, and have a clear way into an adjacent field. This field had been ploughed, turning up the potatoes with which it had been planted, and during the race the farmer's men stolidly worked away, sacking the potatoes for market without paying any attention to the speeding cars.

The first of the racers to meet with mishap at this point was Foxhall Keene, in his 120-horse power Mercedes. He was putting on all speed and his car was pounding along at a terrific rate as he vainly tried to distance Hemery, who was pursuing in his Darracq. Heath was also close up, and Keene barely slowed down as he prepared to round the turn coming down the road through the Guinea woods.

Just as Keene threw his wheel around for the first part of the turn the driving chain of his car snapped. The machinery raced with a whirr and the shock caused Keene's hold to loosen and the car to swerve sharply. It skidded sidewise across the road, bringing up against a telegraph pole, splintering it and tearing half of it away. The car was wrecked, but, as if by a miracle, both Keene and his mechanician were uninjured, although they were severely jolted. As the car hit the post the mechanician was hurled out and one of the wheels passed over his chest. But it did him no further damage than to knock the breath out of him for a few minutes.

Mr. Keene Reports His Mishap.

Although he was not really a factor in the race at this time, Keene was sorely distressed at the accident to his car. He lost no time, however, in trying to patch up a hopeless wreck, but, jumping into the automobile of a friend, he went to the starting point and reported his accident to Mr. Vanderhilt and the committee. Soon afterward the car was carted away.

At about the same time as the Keene accident Joe Tracy, driving the ninety horse power Locomobile and a member of the American team, had a narrow escape on the turn. Tracy's new engines had been working stiffly, and he had lost valuable time which he was trying to make up. He decided to take the "S" at full speed. Once was enough for Tracy. His big car fairly slewed around so that he was pointed almost directly back over the road he had come when he got the car under control. The car did not really stop, but Tracy got it around the turn by cutting a figure that would take a prize as a piece of fancy skating work.

After they had tested the worst turn in the course to their satisfaction, all the drivers gave up attempting to take it without slowing down. There was an up-grade to the turn, and this allowed the drivers to hold the speed which they developed on the long, straight stretch leading to the curve. The reports of the Keene disaster went abroad, and the crowd increased at this point in such numbers that the officials experienced difficulty in keeping them out of the way as the cars swept past. It was while the crowd was greatest that the Italian Chevrolet, driving the 120 horse power Fiat, came along the stretch of the Guinea Woods Road, and prepared to take the turn at a rush. Like Keene he put his steering wheel around sharply, and his momentum was so great as to place an overwhelming pressure up the left forward wheel. The effect was to crumple the compound of sturdy oak and brass as if it were of tissue paper. It broke cleanly off the axle, which in turn snapped as it hit the ground.

Chevrolet's Narrow Escape.

In the twinkling of an eye Chevrolet gripped the wheel with all the force he possessed and steered the car off the

KNABE Supremacy

THE KNABE PIANO of to-day is the result of seventy-odd years of effort devoted to the development and perfecting of one thing. These three-score years and ten have been employed in making the Knabe better in each detail of tone, touch, durability and workmanship. Three generations of the house of Knabe have devoted their whole time, thought and energy—their very life—to the accomplishment of the ambition to make the Knabe piano as near perfection as human skill, ingenuity and modern methods could devise. How well they have succeeded is shown in the New Models of Grands and Uprights now on exhibition in our warerooms. You will at least be interested in seeing and hearing these superb instruments, and we shall be pleased to have you call.

course as he shut off the power. It was a marvelous bit of steering. Chevrolet cleared the telegraph pole that Keene had hit, shaving it so closely that the hub of his rear axle cut a furrow across the splintered base where Keene's car had passed only a short time before.

The accident was also of a hopeless nature, and Chevrolet realized that he was no longer able to compete in the race. The telephone system at once advised the committee at the grand stand that another of the contestants had come to grief at the most dreaded point on the course. This brought around W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., the donor of the cup, and in the car with him were Dr. Louis Nott Lanehardt, the chief surgeon of the day, and Harry Payne Whitney. They stopped for a moment to ascertain if any assistance could be rendered to Chevrolet or his mechanician, but they had both escaped without so much as a scratch, although the car was going at the rate of eighty miles an hour as Chevrolet essayed to make the turn.

Chevrolet was spoken to in French by one of the committee, and the Italian in his excitement made the amazing statement that Christie, in his sixty-horsepower car of his own invention, had tried to run him down. He denounced Christie as the most reckless driver on the course. Chevrolet's declaration was not made as a protest, as he was far behind when his car was wrecked.

After this accident and up to the end of the race Mr. Vanderbilt hovered about the turn and kept in touch with the conditions there. He personally looked after the warning of the crowd by the officials detailed for that purpose, and seemed fearful that before the competition was over the double turn in the road might be the scene of a bad accident if one of the speeding cars failed to steer properly.

Gates Won $10,000 Bet.

Lancia took his last two laps over the zigzag at a daredevil clip in his 120-horsepower Fiat. The plucky Italian, who was really the favorite of the race and upon whom George Wheelock had bet $10,000 with John W. Gates, was simply burning the distance on these last laps in a tremendous effort to make up time he had lost in an accident.

In this mishap Christie's car hit the rear wheels of the Italian's car and locked there. The American's mechanician turned three somersaults from his place on the car before he hit the road. He came down on his left arm, which was fractured, and he was taken in the ambulance to the Mineola Hospital. Christie had had no chance to stop or check his speed, as he was too close to Lancia when it was evident that he could not get out of the way.

As the two cars stood in the road locked together Heath swooped around the zigzag and put on full sail for the straight stretch ahead. He was quick to note that the course was blocked by a wreck, and he shut down and put on his brakes before he plunged into the two cars. By great good fortune Heath did not suffer any material injury. He was delayed enough to provide some interesting figuring for the experts, for the winner of the race last year was so close up with Hemery at the finish that the few minutes' difference might have brought about another result had Heath had a clear track on this lap.

It so happened that this accident brought Hemery and Heath close together for the balance of the race. They sped around the turn within yards of each other, Heath leading up to the last time around, and then as they squared away for the level of the Willetts Road Hemery opened the Darracq for all the speed that it was capable of.

The car leaped and bounded over the oiled surface of the track, and the crowd sent a cheer after the nervy driver as they saw him forge ahead of Heath, and it was this spurt, just as the two cars left the danger "S" turn that won the race for Hemery and lost the cup for Heath.

Only the first, second, third, and fourth cars finishing were weighed, and, as the winner Hemery was the first to arrive, the Darracq was put upon the scales first. Hemery and his mechanician stripped the car in a hurry, all the while the victorious Frenchman singing: "La, la, a'la." He was supremely pleased with his performance, and all he would say was that it had been a good race. He took the car away immediately it had been found correct as to weight.

MR. VANDERBILT PLEASED.

Chairman Morrell Gratified, Too, but Glad It's Over.

"A splendid race from start to finish. The time shows that America can furnish a course with speed possibilities equal to any in Europe. Hemery drove with rare judgment, and deserves every honor for his victory. It was hard luck for Lancia, however, and some of the triumph must be his, as his speed of nearly seventy miles an hour for the first 200 miles of the race was a notable achievement in the history of automobile contests. The management was practically perfect, and the freedom from serious accidents was one of the most satisfactory features of the day's sport."

So spoke William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., the donor of the cup that brought the best foreign cars and drivers to America and drew a great crowd to the Long Island course to witness the second annual running of the Vanderbilt Cup contest. As Mr. Vanderbilt expressed his pleasure at the success of this year's event, he was being congratulated by members of the Racing Board of the American Automobile Association. Prominent in the group was Chairman Robert Lee Morrell, whose activity has been something almost phenomenal. Mr. Morrell looked relieved and was smiling when the race was over.

"What have I to say?" he exclaimed. "I am glad it's over, that expresses my sentiments. It is hard work getting off an event like this in America, but it has afforded lots of sport, a splendid spectacle, and, beyond the disappointments of the non-winning contestants, I don't think any one has any complaint to make. From the standpoint of a high-class automobile competition, the race has been the equal of the best held abroad and better than many."

SLEEPERS LINE THE COURSE.

Weary Spectators Repose on the Grass by the Roadside.

Spectators who remained about Albertson's and at the north end of the automobile racing course yesterday afternoon until a late hour found their way back to Mineola through lanes of sleepers. Nearly every tree along the roads leading to the starting point shaded two or three weary spectators.

The two miles and a half between Albertson's and Mineola was indeed a trip through the Land of Nod. This had been a much-traveled route all day as the crowds journeyed between the starting point at the grand stand at Mineola and the "S" turn in the course at Albertson's. The latter's chief attraction was that it was the most dangerous point on the course. When the race was finished the fine shade trees along the route afforded tempting resting places for those who had felt no downy pillow since Friday morning. The soft grass, the shade, and the balmy day were all alike inviting to tired bodies. Sleep came easily once the weary spectator stretched himself upon the grass, and there were scores of them taking their rest.

Several of the native Long Islanders eyed the sleeping groups, and one of the white-whiskered veterans remarked that it would take a lot of rubbing to take the rheumatism out of their joints. A village constable near Mineola allowed that he'd let the crowd sleep until sundown and then wake 'em up, for he said that they were peaceable folk around there on the Sabbath, and didn't want any left-overs from a devil-wagon holiday.

SPEED AVERAGE HIGH OVER 283-MILE COURSE

Only Two Foreign Road Races Produced Faster Time.

SZISZ'S DARING DRIVING

In Passing Keene He Almost Touched the Rope Which Kept Spectators in Bounds.

The expectations of the automobile experts were thoroughly realized in yesterday's race. Predictions had been freely made previous to the event that the winner would do over 60 miles an hour. The average time for the 283 miles, which included ten circuits of the 28.3-mile course, was 61½ miles, a record that has only been beaten twice abroad, and on one of these occasions by Hemery himself, when last Summer he won the Ardennes circuit contest at an average hourly speed of 62.34 miles, the distance being 373 miles.

In the Florio Cup contest, held in August over the Brescia circuit in Italy, an Italian driver, Raggio, won the 311-mile contest at an average of 64.8 miles per hour. The Gordon Bennett Cup race in France this year was won by Thery in 47.6 miles per hour. The second contest for the Vanderbilt Cup, therefore, will go down in the annals of long-distance automobile events as one of the finest exhibitions ever seen.

While the time left scarcely anything to be desired, there was no lack of excitement. Heath, the holder of the cup last year, when his average was 52.4 miles an hour, lost by only 3 minutes and 32 seconds. He started three minutes ahead of Hemery, and when it was seen that the two drivers of the fast French machines were making a hot finish excitement in the grand stand reached fever heat.

An accident of the most trifling sort would be fatal to Hemery. Would he keep it up? was the question asked among the knowing auto enthusiasts. His ninth lap had been done in 28:34, and when, amid a waving of flags, Hemery shot past the judges' stand in 27:35 for his final lap, his victory was assured. Scarcely had Hemery passed when Heath was discerned far down the road, dashing up the gentle incline at terrific speed. He had made a game fight and came flashing by 32 seconds after Hemery. Last year, when Heath beat the Frenchman Clement, he won by a fraction over a minute.

Winner Calmly Received.

Hemery received no applause as he came by the stand a winner. Yet the skillful Frenchman had been one of the favorites, and he is acknowledged to be one of the best drivers in Europe. But a chain of unfortunate circumstances seemed to have favored Hemery at the expense of men who might have made much faster time. Especially was this true in the case of Lancia, the big Italian, who drove one of the 120-horsepower Fiat cars that ran in the Gordon Bennett race. Lancia finished fourth, but he might have had third had he exerted himself. An accident in which Walter Christie's car ran into him, cutting a tire and otherwise shaking him up, cost Lancia much time on the eighth lap. Up to that time he had been way ahead, completing the seventh lap in the elapsed time of 2:49:52, which means more, perhaps, when it is stated that Lancia covered 198 miles in 170 minutes, an average of 69½ miles an hour. Five of those seven laps had been done under 24 minutes.

Lancia pluckily continued, but limped up to the judges' stand at the completion of the race and told his woes in excitable fashion to H. R. Hollander, the head of the Fiat automobile agency in this country. Joe Tracy, one of the American drivers, snatched third place with his Locomobile by 2 minutes and 5 seconds.

Tires Bothered Wagner.

The fifth member of the team, Wagner, who drove a Darracq car similar to Hemery's winning car, had a tire blow out as he came by the grand stand at the end of the second lap. He finished the third lap, although at considerable loss of time, but later had trouble with tires and was not seen again. Szisz, who had been picked as a strong favorite, finished nine laps, and had the race not been called off when four cars finished he would have been timed for the whole circuit. Duray finished seven laps.

Next to the French team came the Italians in all-around reliability.

Nazarro, driving a 120 horse power Fiat, the duplicate of Lancia's, completed eight laps, and Sartori, who drove Alfred G. Vanderbilt's 90 horse power Fiat, also completed eight laps. Chevrolet broke down in his Fiat car in the Willets Road in his seventh lap, and Cedrino met with serious tire trouble near the Bull's Head turn in the third lap and dropped out.

Between the German and American teams there is little to choose, although, as America was third in the race, the home team has something to boast of. Tracy's driving was a splendid exhibition of caution, calculating judgment, and the American automobilists could hardly praise him enough. But as a team the American cars were a disappointment. Bert Dingley, winner of the eliminating trials three weeks ago to pick the American team, cracked the top of a cylinder of his Pope-Toledo in the third lap, but succeeded in partially repairing it, and managed to complete five laps. Lytle, whose new seventy-five-horse-power Pope-Toledo was said to be a wonder, ran over a dog in the third lap on the Jericho Turnpike beyond the grand stand, and when near the Bull's Head turn his chain broke, and considerable time was lost in repairing it. Before the car could be stopped his mechanician, Tattersall, was thrown out, but he was uninjured. Lytle completed only four laps.

The White steam car, driven by Walter C. White, and which had made a favorable showing in the practice rounds, did not do well. Tire troubles were its chief difficulty. The car took more than fifty-one minutes for the first round. It got through four laps, taking over three hours.

Christie's Car Had Troubles.

The Christie car, which was driven by Walter Christie, had trouble with its motors early in the day, and did not appear at the start until twenty-eight minutes after its time to start. It had more or less difficulty in every round, and finally crashed into Lancia's car. The collision was not Christie's fault.

Foxhall Keene seemed to have one of the leading places well within his grasp when, in the sixth round, he ran into a pole near the "S" turn at Albertson's and smashed his machine. It was a great disappointment, for Keene handled his big racer as cleverly as the most veteran professional in the race, and he had a host of friends in the grand stand. John B. Warden, another gentleman driver, completed seven laps and finally stopped on account of trouble with his tires. Jenatzy, winner of the Gordon Bennett race in 1903, and one of the most famous European drivers, was put out in the fourth lap by a broken cylinder. Campbell only completed one lap. All of the Germans drove one hundred and twenty horse power Mercedes cars, except Campbell, who drove S. B. Stevens's ninety horse power Mercedes.

Three Cars Were Excluded.

The failure of the American team to show to better advantage aroused fresh criticism of the action of the Racing Board of the American Automobile Association, when, after the elimination trials, the board threw out three of the American cars that completed the four circuits successfully and substituted three others. The substituted cars were the White steamer, the Christie car, and Lytle's Pope-Toledo. The action of the committee aroused a storm of protest, and there was much curiosity to see whether the judgment of the committee would be vindicated by a superior showing of the substituted cars.

The course was well policed, and all of the officials, William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., among them, had been on the scene nearly half an hour before the cars were required to line up. Jenatzy, the favorite of the German team, was first away. Starter Wagner sent him off promptly at 6 o'clock, and at one-minute intervals the others went off. Every car and every driver had his adherents, and a cheer greeted each contestant from the crowded grand stand seats, which, notwithstanding the unusual hour for a sporting event, were crowded with men and women prominent in sporting, financial, and social life. Dingley by virtue of his victory in the elimination trial was the third to start, and he got a rousing cheer. Lancia went away one minute later. He sat upright in his car and made a fine, quick start.

Keene Had Many Friends.

Foxhall Keene left immediately after Lancia, and a great waving of handkerchiefs followed him as he flew out of sight. Then followed Wagner, Tracy, Nazzaro, and the others in order until 6:10, the time for the Christie car to start. It had not arrived, and, after waiting a minute, Cedrino, with his big Fiat, went off. Campbell, in Stevens's Mercedes, bearing the figure "X" as a protest against the unlucky number 13, got away well.

George Heath, the holder of the trophy, came up to the line, and he got a rousing cheer and waved his hand gayly as he shot away. Sartori was the last man to leave in the regular order, but at 6:38, after ten cars had already completed the first lap, a shout was heard. "The Christie car is coming!" and down the road the long, low, bluish car known as the Christie creation was seen coming up at full speed. It had to take its start at 6:10, however, so began heavily handicapped.

An elaborate telephone system had been arranged. Watchers were stationed at the telephones at a dozen places on the course and they flashed the time and news of good and bad import. This news was promptly communicated to the 5,000 persons in the grand stand section by the announcer, Peter Prunty, whose voice could be heard above the roar of the approaching cars. Another novelty was the pistoning of a buglar at the end of the stand, and as his clarion notes rang out hundreds of eyes were turned down the road, for the bugle meant the approach of a racer. A mammoth blackboard on the roof of the press stand, which was opposite the main stand, showed the spectators just how each car stood and its time for each lap. Over a hundred judges, markers, and timers were engaged in receiving and communicating the time, and it was all done so rapidly that within a few seconds of the completion of a lap the time was announced.

Jenatzy held his lead at the judges' stand for the first lap, but by a narrow margin, for when the bugle sounded for the second time and the well-known cry, "Car coming," rang out, the expectant throng rose like one person and peered far down the road where, as the light became brighter, a vista of fully a quarter of a mile could be had.

"It's Lancia! It's Lancia!" was the shout. Sure enough, the intrepid Italian, clad in a faded red sweater and sitting upright, with his hands firmly grasping the wheel, came in sight and then with a whir and a din that was over before one actually realized what had happened, the big car was far down the road. Lancia had started three minutes behind Jenatzy, but in actual time he led him and had passed on the road Duray and Dingley. His time for the 28.3 miles was 23:38:49, an average of about 71 miles an hour, and it caused the veterans to draw in a long breath of wonder. Jenatzy's elapsed time was 24:52, splendid going, and it gave a line at once on what the race would bring forth. All of the nineteen cars completed the first lap successfully, but the order of the original start was greatly changed.

Szisz, with his beetle-shaped Renault car, was in third place, only three seconds behind Jenatzy; Wagner, with his fast Darracq, was fourth, one second behind Szisz. It was remarkable racing, and from this point to the end excitement and expectancy had full sway with the crowd. When Heath came by he waved his hand gallantly to a party of friends in the boxes. Lytle went by slowly. The White car failed to appear until more than half of the racers had ended the second lap, and it was announced that Walter White had stopped at Bull's Head to repair mechanical troubles.

The second lap weeded out the first car, Campbell's Mercedes. Lancia still maintained his lead by elapsed time, but he had not yet overhauled Jenatzy. Only 55 seconds separated their cars as they passed by on the second lap, but Lancia still led by elapsed time. Jenatzy had dropped to third place, the Frenchman, Szisz, taking second only 4-5 second ahead of the German. As if this were not exciting enough in itself, Szisz added a thrilling touch to it by overhauling Foxhall Keene just as the two cars approached the grand stand. The sight of the two big racers down the road, within a few yards of each other, was the sensation of the entire race.

Szisz, notwithstanding the fact that the roadway adjoining the grand stand was somewhat narrower than in the open did not slacken speed for one instant. Keene heard him coming but evidently feared to swerve off at such a crowded place. Szisz suddenly darted off to the left of Keene's car and for a moment the spectators held their breath as they saw the daring Frenchman run over to the far side of the road, almost grazing the rope that held the crowd back above the grand stand. There was a wild scamper-ing as the cars dashed by, less than six inches separating the powerful racer from the first row of spectators.

Szisz Takes the Lead.

As the cars shot by the stand the timers gave Szisz a lead of one-fifth of a second. Just beyond the stand Szisz seemed to gather fresh momentum, and suddenly darted in front of Keene, barely escaping grazing the latter's front wheel as he forged out to the centre of the road. Tracy, Dingley, and Warden then followed in close order. Hemery, from fourteenth place at the end of the first lap, jumped to sixth place, while Heath was eighth. The White car came along just before Hemery had passed, taking 51:31 for its first lap, its first serious disappointment for the American team.

In the third Lap Lancia passed Jenatzy. He was still doing his laps under 24 minutes, and even the novice began to appreciate the fact that he was looking at something rarely seen in a long-distance contest. Szisz still held his position as second, but Hemery had made another big stride and was now third, his third lap being made in 25:56. Duray was in fourth place, a remarkable jump from his position as eleventh man at the end of the second lap. His loss there had been due to the blowing out of a tire just as he entered upon his second lap.

As the big French car flew by the stand a loud report startled the crowd of watchers, and amid the smoke emitted by the car flying bits of tire were thrown high in the air. A tire had exploded. The car listed badly to one side, and the mechanician just saved himself from being dashed to the ground. Duray threw on the brakes, and the crowd in front hastily made way as he pulled his car up to the side of the road and began repairs. He lost little time, and by completing the third lap in the fast time of 25:40 leaped to fourth place, just a shade ahead of Hemery.

This third lap was disastrous to Cedrino, for his car broke some parts of its running gear in the Willets Road, and Dingley cracked his cylinder near Hyde Park, less than three miles from the grand stand. Dingley had been running very consistently, doing the first lap in 29:44 and the second in 31:11. No one expected to see him again, but his mechanicians got together hastily, and, although well knowing it was a forlorn hope, repaired the cylinder sufficiently to allow Dingley to pay his respects to the grand stand about two and three-quarter hours later. Tracy, Heath, and Sartori had all been making slight gains, Heath running steadily in from 26 to 27 minutes for the rounds.

Three Were Weeded Out.

The fourth lap eliminated Jenatzy, Wagner, and Christie, but the last did not drop out until long after many of the leading cars had finished several succeeding laps. A great overlapping of cars set in. Lancia finished his fourth lap long before any other car. This fourth lap was Lancia's best effort, for he did it in 23:18. Heath made a surprising jump to second place, but was nearly fifteen minutes behind the remarkable Italian. Lytle meanwhile had not finished his second round. His chain broke near the Bull's Head turn, and when his mechanician, Tattersall, went back to a repair station to get another, Lytle fixed it before Tattersall returned. He then got another mechanician and continued the race, and this fact gave rise to the rumor that Tattersall was injured.

From this point to the eighth lap it was apparently only a question of how great a margin Lancia would win by. Nothing seemed to stop him. Four consecutive laps he had covered in less than twenty-four minutes each. Then he experienced a little trouble on the fifth lap, and had to stop for a trifling tire repair. It did not change his position, although it left him but 13:16 ahead of Heath. Szisz had dropped to fifth place.

In the third lap the Frenchman who had been picked by many to win, broke the water connection of his car, and it was impossible to repair it. Both he and his mechanician did their best to tie up the pipe so that the water would not flow out, but it availed little with the cars pounding at such speed over the course and frequent stops had to be made for water. Notwithstanding this trouble, Szisz jumped to fourth place in the sixth lap, and when the race ended he was fifth, having concluded nine laps.

Keene's Startling Gains.

Foxhall Keene made a startling leap from sixth to third position in the fifth lap. He made the preceding round in 26:13, and had begun to look dangerous when, to the consternation of the crowd, word suddenly came that Keene had run into a telephone pole at the "S" turn, near Albertson's. Half an hour later Keene appeared in front of the grand-stand and was immediately surrounded by a crowd of sympathizers. He was covered with grime. He and his mechanician had been thrown out, but fortunately escaped injury. Still filled with the excitement of racing, Keene could not help exclaiming, although in front of the box in which sat Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and a party of friends:

"Damn my luck."

But for the accident Keene might have won the race, for he was but five minutes behind Heath when he was forced out.

Meanwhile Lancia's lead was steadily increasing. There was confidence in his bearing every time he shot by the grand stand, and his car was going with perfect smoothness. He finished his sixth lap in 23:45, and the seventh in 24:02, being then over twenty minutes ahead of Heath, who held grimly on to second place. Christie was only completing his fourth lap when, while Lancia was half way around his eighth lap, the accident occurred that robbed Lancia of the victory when it was all but in his grasp.

Hemery Took the Lead.

Only seven cars finished the eighth lap, and Lancia was reduced to sixth place. Hemery, who had been third, leaped to first, as Heath had tire troubles and took 33:32 for the eighth lap. He still retained second place, while Nazzaro came up to third. Szisz, despite a broken water connection, was fourth, and Tracy was a close fifth. The American driver of the big Locomobile had begun to attract attention long before this period in the race, and the spectators cheered him heartily every time he passed the stand.

Lancia made a game effort to regain his old place, and had the race been but half over when the accident happened, he might have won back his lost honors. His ninth lap was made in the fast time of 23:51, being the sixth lap that he made in better than 24 minutes. It was of no use. Lancia saw that himself, for he was posted on the relative positions of the leaders, and as he finished the race he stopped above the stand and came limping home, the picture of disappointment. Hemery and Heath made a stirring finish, and Tracy was cheered loudly as he snatched third place, after a remarkably creditable exhibition of steady driving.

LANCIA WILL PROTEST.

With Heath He Charges That the Winner Used English Tires.

Lancia, closely followed by Heath, and, at a moment's interval by the American Tracy, arrived after Hemery had left the farm yard where the weighing scales were. Lancia and Heath exchanged greetings, and for a few minutes looked on while a dozen mechanicians stripped the cars, wiped the pounds of greasy sand from their frames and running gear and got the speed machines down to trim where they would come under the prescribed scale weight.

From the moment he arrived it was evident that Lancia was almost bursting with suppressed wrath. He vociferously talked with Heath in French, the burden of his declarations being that he was about to protest the race. Lancia took the ground that the tires with which the French Darracq was equipped were of English make, and under the rules this was enough to throw the car out of the race.

The Italian and his mechanician were excited and they blamed their loss of the contest and the trophy upon several drivers who, they said, were careless. Lancia told Mr. Riker that he would enter a protest with Mr. Morrell, and Heath, after some persuasion, said that he would join him in the protest.

When questioned as to his part in the race, Heath said that the worst feature of the contest this year was the crowds that swarmed over the track, which made him always fearful of running down some spectator. He said that he was unable to make anything like the speed that he might have made along the fine level lower western stretch of the Jericho Turnpike because the track was as crowded as a Broadway sidewalk. He judged that the crowd, as compared with last year, was five for one.

In talking of the conditions, Heath said that, in his estimation, the conditions in this country could never equal those abroad. This was mainly because in France, Germany, and Italy the army is used to police the roads and to keep the course clear. The American provisions were inadequate, he thought, for the purpose, and the wonder was that some one was not maimed or killed, because of the chances that they took. Heath said that he thought that the course this year contained some spots more dangerous than that of a year ago, and yet he felt less tired than he had when he won last year.

When Tracy turned into the yard he received an ovation which he smilingly acknowledged through the grime and grease with which his face was bespattered. The only American to get placed said that he was surprised to even get third, because he had installed new cylinders over night. These worked badly at the start, but behaved beautifully toward the end, and he was of the opinion that if he had had a lap or two more he would have been able to take the lead.

Tracy said that he did not expect to enter any protest, although he was convinced that the Dunlop tires on Hemery's car were English, and he knew that Heath's car was equipped with an Alseman ignitor made in Vienna. Tracy said that he would allow others to make these protests, realizing that in the event of their being allowed he would be the winner of the cup.

The American driver said that only one thing would have induced him to make a protest, and that would have been the victory of the Renault car driven by Szisz. Tracy complained that Szisz stopped in the middle of the road three times to take in water for his tank, and said that by so doing he had endangered the lives of all of the drivers in the race. Tracy said that he was not pleased with the course, nor the effort to keep the spectators out of harm's way. He was of the opinion that only a Brooklyn or a Broadway motorman could sail through the scampering crowds without it getting on his nerves.

As for the course, Tracy declared that only half of it was in fit condition to speed over. He pointed out that the eastern and northerly portions from Jericho through East Norwich and thence along the North Hempstead Turpike were so rough that he could not bring out the full speed of his car. The vibration was so great that Tracy could not hold to his seat and steer, so he was obliged to slow down. As for the "S" turn, Tracy said that the one test he gave it sufficed for him, as he knew that with his heavy car he was liable to slew around upon one of the telegraph poles and go out of the race for good.

Although the intention was to only weigh the three cars finishing in order, Lancia insisted that his car be weighed, and it was put on the scales and found to be correct. This gave rise to the report that some action would be taken upon the protest that was to be entered by Lancia and Heath. While the committee would not say what action would be taken, it was reported that Mr. Vanderbilt was satisfied that the conditions had been compiled with, and that the protests would amount to nothing in the way of changing the winner of the race and holder of the cup.

Chairman Morrell of the Racing Committee said last night that he had heard a report that Heath, who finished second, would protest the race. No such protest had been brought officially to the attention of the committee, Mr. Morrell said, and he did not expect that it would be. He added that in his opinion the race would stand just as it was finished with Hemery as winner and Heath in second place.

NINE DOGS, VICTIMS.

Police Have Many Complaints of Killings by Returning Chauffeurs.

The telephone bell rang for the ninth time in the Liberty Avenue Station yesterday afternoon, and Policeman Twellman answered it.

"What's that?" asked Twellman in disgust, "another dead dog on Jamaica Avenue?"

Sergt. Zwingman, who had made entries on the blotter until his fingers ached, looked discouraged. It was another dead dog, the ninth that had been killed on Jamaica Avenue yesterday afternoon by automobiles returning from the road race. Residents of Jamaica Avenue, who owned the dogs, came trooping to the station, shaking with indignation over the reckless speed maintained by chauffeurs. It resulted in the stationing of several additional policemen along the avenue to watch for speed violations.

The Highest Expression of the Mode in This Fashion Show for Women.

Exclusive New Models in Costumes, Suits, Toilettes, Gowns and Coats.

That every garment in this wonderful exposition is authoritative is shown to a marked degree by the influence of the master designer, and his co-worker, the master tailorman.

We have drawn upon every fashion centre of the Old World, as well as upon the ingenuity of our own organization to the end that this would be the most complete and handsomest showing ever offered.

Tailored Suits for Women.

FOR the making of garments belonging to the tailor-made class we maintain our own staff of designers and tailormen. This exclusive feature of the Hackett, Carhart Women's store insures tailor-made dresses that receive the benefit of real man tailoring; that for the same reason require seldom an alteration, so well are they modelled and fitted.

The suits we tell of below are in all the new shades and colors of the season—Bordeaux, Burgundy, amethyst, jacqueminot, plum, Aubergne, rose, gray, ruby, champagne, Alice blue, brown, navy, reseda, myrtle and black.

Four New Suit Models, AT $39.50.

CROWD AT TURN SEES RACERS COME TO GRIEF

Repair Points Also Favorite Spot for Spectators.

MISHAPS MANY AND VARIED

Drivers at First Took the Curves Carefully, but Later on Risked More Speed.

The day at Lakeville, in front of W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.'s, estate, was rich in incident. The accident to the Keene machine and the collision with Christie that cost Lancia the race occurred within about a mile of this dangerous turning. The first was caused by Foxhall Keene speeding on an awkward curve to overtake the leader, Lancia, when the flying Italian was very little ahead of him.

At the time Lancia was leading the race, with a full thirty-mile advantage over his nearest competitor, Heath, in his Panhard, and, with less than ninety miles to go, seemed sure of the race. Christie, too, was put out of it, but Lancia was able to continue with heavy loss of time, and he made a game effort to make up the advantage which five cars had gained. Three of them he passed, and on the last round seemed likely to overtake the remaining two, but had to yield and content himself with running fourth.

In expectation of accident at the turning, a crowd gathered there. The four-mile stretch from Albertson to Lakeville ends in an abrupt curve that is negotiated at high speed only by taking one's life in one's hands. In the early turnings the men were careful to slow down when approaching it and take it leisurely with careful steering, but later, as the excitement grew and time pressed, one after another risked more speed, until it was a wonder that a serious accident did not result.

Serpentine Twist at Turn.

To make matters worse, once around the turn the machines entered on a steep incline that led direct to a serpentine double twist in the road as it passed beside the lake. All the drivers had to approach this twist at speed on the incline, and it took a steady hand to avoid running into two telegraph poles placed at the exact positions where they would be most difficult to avoid. The crowd was quick to see the possibilities of the place as a producer of accident, and gathered there. It watched car after car descend the incline and steer around the "S," and gasped every time one of them neared either obstruction.

Hemery on his fifth round came within a foot of taking the first pole fairly with his left wheel, but a lucky skid swerved him just in the nick of time. Other cars approached it, but none so close as this. As they swung around the second turn the inner wheels left the road and the machines swerved from side to side with every promise of overturning.

The stretch from Lakeville to Hyde Park, offering a fairly broad expanse in the main, afforded fine opportunity for speeding a car and overhauling a competitor. One of the most exciting brushes of the race took place almost at the start on this stretch between the White steamer, Heath, and Christie. Each had made one round and was running on his second for the turn at Hyde Park. Almost abreast the three approached it, the White having the better position, skidding around it in the lead, with Christie following and Heath bringing up the rear. Just preceding them Tracy and Dingley had a brush on the same stretch, and Dingley was compelled to give place to Tracy in his locomobile. This was almost Dingley's last appearance, for it was on the next round that his Pope-Toledo broke a cylinder, and he, with his mechanician, was compelled to sit on the wall of W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.'s, place and watch the drivers speeding by while his car stood in the driveway of the Vanderbilt place undergoing repairs. When at last these were made, the car covered two more laps before it retired.

Rapid Repair Work.

Lytle was the first to seek repairs here. On his second round he called for new wheels, and both forward wheels were removed and replaced. Remarkably little time was consumed in doing it, too. White sought relief on his fourth round when he changed his tires and was away again in six minutes. Tracy and Warden shared the garage with these two latter.

Lancia's wonderful driving attracted attention here at once, as it did elsewhere on the course. He had overhauled all save Jenatzy on the first two rounds, and when he hove in sight taking the serpentine in front there was loud cheering for his plucky work. As round after round he drew ahead of one after another, lapping them all finally, he was cheered again and again.

As Jenatzy gave way to Warden and Warden to Keene as his immediate follower the enthusiasm of the gathering grew. It was on the fifth round that Keene was behind Lancia, and in second place in actual rotation. On the sixth he was eagerly awaited after Lancia shot by, but as car after car passed and Lancia again appeared it was realized that some accident had befallen him. Then came the rumor of his running into the telegraph pole followed by a wild story that he had been killed. There was a rush to the scene of the accident and the true story of it learned.

Mishap to Lancia's Car.

Heath on the sixth lap assumed the position Keene had had, with Tracy following him, and the interest was transferred to the locomobile. On the seventh Hemery began to move forward and had displaced both Tracy and Duray at the point, the three machines approaching Lakeville in succession scarcely a hundred yards apart. Then suddenly Lancia dropped out of sight, and it was Hemery who was in command, with Heath following and Tracy and Szisz fighting it out around the serpentine and down the stretch to Hyde Park with scarcely twenty yards to separate them. As Szisz made two attempts to pass the American car and each time failed there were loud cheers for Tracy.

Lancia appeared sixth and was well received. On his ninth round, when he had made up so much ground and regained third place, within striking distance, seemingly, of the leaders, he got an ovation. Hemery and Heath were in sight of each other entering the Hyde Park stretch on this round, but Hemery had opened quite a gap on the final round and both had drawn away from Lancia. The final appearance of Tracy called forth as hearty applause as had greeted any of the drivers during the day.

Crowd at Repair Points.

Each stoppage of a car for repairs was the signal for the crowd gathering about it, watching with consuming interest each move of its workmen. Lytle's stop to change his wheels and White's six-minute delay to renew tires were followed by another stop of Lytle's for water and of Tracy's for fresh gasoline and to pump tires. Warden's right rear tire burst as he slewed around one curve, but he kept on to his control, dividing his time between the road ahead and the flat wheel behind. White tore off a tire completely and bent the spokes so badly that he had to replace the wheel with a fresh one.

These stoppages gave plenty of diversion when there were no cars passing, but, aside from the two accidents, when there was a mad scramble to reach the scene, the attention was pretty closely riveted on the incline and the serpentine shoot following, which to many who saw the race was the most fascinating and interesting thing in the event.

Alfred Mosely Entertaincd.

Alfred Mosely, C. M. G., of London was entertained at luncheon yesterday by Charles A. Moore, President of the American Protective Tariff League, at the Merchants' Central Club. There were also present William Barbour, Theodore M. Ives, F. M. Smith, David Williams, Lindon W. Bates, E. H. Clift, T. Z. Cowles, Charles A. Moore, Jr., Wilbur F. Wakeman, Charles P. Homer, and Colby M. Chester, Jr.

EX-LIEUT. BILSE SLAIN?

Report That He Has Either Been Murdered or Has Killed Himself.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Oct. 14.—It is reported in Forbach that ex-Lieut. Bilse, who was imprisoned and deprived of his military rank on account of his celebrated novel, "A Little Garrison," has either been murdered or has committed suicide.

That Bilse escaped alive from the series of duels he was compelled to fight with officers who felt themselves insulted by his book, and who challenged him as soon as he was released from prison, was regarded as astonishing. He was wounded rather severely in one of the duels, and after he had recovered he went to London, where he became one of the "lions" of the season. Later on it was reported that he was writing another book, but recently little had been heard about him.

"A Little Garrison" achieved an astonishing success. It was translated into many languages and brought its author a great sum of money.

BOMB THROWERS KILL FIVE.

Two Servants Slain by Explosive and Three Policemen Shot.

WARSAW, Oct. 14.—A bomb was thrown this morning at the villa of an English manufacturer. The cook and gardener were killed and the house was damaged.

The bomb throwers fled, pursued by police. When close pressed the fugitives turned, shot, and killed three policemen and then escaped.

ENGLAND PROTECTS NORWAY.

Agrees to Maintain Treaty of 1855 If Monarchy Is Established.

LONDON, Sunday, Oct. 15.—The Observer says it understands that Great Britain has agreed to maintain the treaty of 1855, which guarantees the integrity of Scandinavia so far as Norway is concerned, on condition that a monarchy be established.

The paper adds that the candidature of Prince Charles of Denmark for the Norwegian throne has been virtually accepted by all parties.

REVOLT IN BRITISH AFRICA.

Tribesmen Threaten to Destroy Uganda Railway—Severe Fighting.

HAMBURG, Oct. 14.—The natives of British East Africa have risen in insurrection.

According to trustworthy reports which arrived here to-day from Zanzibar the Randi tribe threatens the destruction of the Uganda Railway.

Severe fighting has already occurred between the British troops and the rebels.

TARRASCH WINS THE MATCH.

Defeats Marshall — Brooklyn Player Got Only One Game.

NUREMBURG, Oct. 14.—Play in the seventeenth game of the chess match between F. J. Marshall of Brooklyn and Dr. S. Tarrasch of this city was resumed here to-day, and the game and match were won by Tarrasch.

Marshall opened with a Ruy Lopez and Tarrasch selected the Bird defense. Both players emerged on even terms from the developing stage and neither could gain an advantage during the first session of play. In the evening, however, Tarrasch, by a pretty combination, secured the better position and won after thirty-two moves.

The final score of the match is: Tarrasch, 8; Marshall 1; drawn, 8.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall will return to the United States at an early date.

CZAR FURIOUS WITH COUSIN.

Grand Duke Cyril to be Deprived of All His Honors and Exiled.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 14.—The Grand Duke Cyril arrived at Peterhof this evening, having been summoned from Germany to receive the full weight of the imperial displeasure on account of his marriage to the divorced Grand Duchess Victoria of Hesse, which took place recently at Munich.

He will be deprived of his rank as aide de camp to the Emperor, of his commission in the army, of his uniform, his orders, and other honors, and will be excluded from Russia.

The Grand Duke will suffer more severely than the Grand Dukes Paul and Michael, as he not only defied the reiterated commands of the Emperor, but because he broke the canonical laws in marrying a divorced woman and his first cousin, and also because the Grand Duke of Hesse is the Empress's brother.

HARD BLOW FOR BALFOUR.

Liberals Capture a Seat Regarded as a Conservative Stronghold.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The Liberals won a notable victory yesterday in the election of J. O. Andrews to represent the Barkston Ash Division of the West Riding of Yorkshire by a majority of 228 over the Unionist candidate, George R. Lane-Fox.

The vacancy was caused by the death of Sir Robert Gunter, Conservative, who had represented the constituency since its creation in 1885. The election just held was fought on the fiscal and education questions.

The last previous election in the Barkston Ash Division was in 1892, when Sir Robert Gunter obtained a majority of 1,241. To secure the seat for the Liberals thus seemed an almost hopeless task.

The result is in all probability due to the extraordinary exertions made by the Free Trade Union, which sent to the division a number of its ablest campaigners. It is declared that electioneering in the division was reduced almost to an exact science. All the free trade campaigners were good speakers and clever workers.

When arrangements had been made in any district for holding a meeting, the Free Traders were not content with announcing the names of speakers, but the campaigners appeared on the scene early in the day and interviewed the villagers in their cottages or on their way to or from work. Even avowed Unionists were in this way attracted to Liberal meetings.

FOOD.

"GOLD GOLD"

"Good," He Says, "But Comfort Better."

"Food that fits is better than a gold mine," says a grateful man.

"Before I commenced to use Grape-Nuts food no man on earth ever had a worse infliction from catarrh of the stomach than I had for years.

"I could eat nothing but the very lightest food and even that gave me great distress.

"I went through the catalogue of prepared foods, but found them all (except Grape-Nuts) more or less indigestible, generating gas in the stomach, (which in turn produced headache and various other pains and aches) and otherwise unavailable for my use.

"Grape-Nuts food I have found easily digested and assimilated, and it has renewed my health and vigor and made me a well man again. The catarrah of the stomach has disappeared entirely with all its attendant ills, thanks to Grape-Nuts, which now is my almost sole food. I want no other." PEACE TREATY SIGNED BY CZAR AND MIKADO

Ratifications Exchanged by Cable —War Officially Ends.

JAPAN NOTIFIED BY FRANCE

And Russia Informed of Mikado's Ratification by America—Interned Ships Can Now Be Freed.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 14.—The treaty of peace was signed by the Emperor to-day.

The treaty, engrossed on parchment, with the French and English text in parallel columns, was sent by Foreign Minister Lamsdorff to Peterhof, where the ceremony of signature took place.

PARIS, Oct. 14.—Premier Rouvier, acting on behalf of the Russian Government, to-night cabled to M. Harmand, the French Minister at Tokio, instructions to inform the Japanese Government that the Emperor of Russia to-day signed the peace treaty.

Early in the day the Foreign Office received a notification from St. Petersburg that Emperor Nicholas would probably sign the treaty to-day and would ask France to communicate the news of the ratification to Japan. Premier Rouvier accordingly remained in his office throughout the day for the purpose of immediately transmitting the message.

Notice of the signing of the treaty did not reach here until 6 o'clock this evening, when the Russian Embassy received a dispatch saying that Emperor Nicholas had affixed his signature to the document and requesting that France be asked to transmit the information to Japan. In the absence of Ambassador Nelidoff the Counselor of the Embassy, M. Neklioudoff, went to the Foreign Office at 7 o'clock this evening and met Premier Rouvier. He informed M. Rouvier of the signing of the treaty at St. Petersburg, and requested that Japan be notified of the resumption of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

Premier Rouvier promised to expedite the matter, and immediately cabled orders to the French Minister at Tokio to communicate the information to the Japanese Government.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The Emperor of Russia and the Emperor of Japan to-day signed their respective copies of the peace treaty, thus officially ending the war.

Baron Rosen, the Russian Ambassador, called at the State Department to-day and saw Secretary Root. While he had no official advices on the subject information had reached him to the effect that the Emperor of Russia had early in the day affixed his signature to the treaty. It was not necessary for the Ambassador to convey this information officially to the State Department, for according to the plan arranged yesterday the Russian Foreign Office was to advise the French Government of the act of signature and that Government in turn was to advise the Japanese Government.

A few minutes after noon Minister Takahira appeared at the State Department with a message stating that the Emperor of Japan had signed the treaty at Tokio. A cablegram was immediately dispatched to Spencer Eddy, Chargé of the American Embassy at St. Petersburg, who was instructed to inform the Russian Foreign Office that the Emperor of Japan had performed his part.

So, both copies of the treaty having been duly signed, and each of the great nations lately engaged in hostilities having been officially informed of the fact, the Russo-Japanese war, which began Feb. 8, 1904, terminated officially to-day.

Little remains to be done to meet the official requirements. At a later date, probably in the course of a month or two, copies of the treaty will be actually exchanged, probably in Washington by the Russian Ambassador and the Japanese Minister or Chargé. There is nothing for this Government to do in the way of proclamation.

The Aurora, Jemchug, and Oleg, interned at Manila, and the Lena, at Mare Island, will now be released whenever the Russian Government sees fit to make the request, though, as it is understood that the ships have been undergoing extensive repairs to make them seaworthy, it may be some time before they are ready to sail.

TOGO GOING TO TOKIO SOON.

Naval Review ot be Held Oct. 23—W. J. Bryan in Japan.

TOKIO, Oct. 14.—Admiral Togo landed from his flagship at Ise Bay to-day and proceeded direct to the great Ise Temple to worship. He will stay in the bay until joined by the other ships of his squadron and then proceed to Tokio for the naval review of Oct. 23.

Vice Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, commander of the British squadron, was joined here to-day by Lady Noel and their daughters, who were met at the railroad station by Japanese naval officers. They drove to the British Legation in an imperial carriage.

The garden party given by Prince Arisugawa at the Shiba Palace yesterday in honor of Admiral Noel and his party was a great success.

The visit of William J. Bryan to Japan is welcomed by the papers here, which are copiously recounting his political career.

LINCOLN, Neb., Oct. 14.—A cable message from William J. Bryan says he and his family arrived to-day at Yokohama.

J. P. Morgan, Jr., Going to Russia.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—On George W. Perkins's arrival in Europe, he will be joined by J. P. Morgan, Jr., who will accompany him to St. Petersburg. Mr. Perkins left New York on Oct. 9 on the Kaiser Wilhelm II.

INSULTED GOVERNOR BY MAIL.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Oct. 14.—Prof. Robert L. Greene, head of the Department of Pharmacy of Notre Dame University, was arrested to-day by United States Marshal Petit, charged with violating the postal laws.

He is accused of sending a postal card to the Governor of Vermont, at the time a movement was launched to save from the gallows Mrs. Rogers. Across the corner of the card was written "Professional man butcher."

ARMENIANS SEND US A FLAG.

Gift to the United States from Orphans at Harpoot.

There passed through the Appraiser's office yesterday an interesting and beautiful gift to the Government of the United States in the shape of an American ensign, measuring 7 feet 8 inches by 3 feet 11 inches, woven of silk, weighing twenty-five pounds, and bearing the inscription:

Presented to the
UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT,
In gratitude, by the Armenian Orphans of Harpoot, Syria.

The flag is intended to be used only as a hanging, and will be forwarded to the State Department.

Punch Bowl for the Kaiser.

The German Warrior and Veteran Societies of North America intend to present a silver punch bowl to the Kaiser on the occasion of his silver wedding, Feb. 27 next. The bowl will be partly of Indian design, and will cost $5,000.

BRITISH EXPLANATION SATISFIES GERMANY

But the Delcasse Incident May Lead to a Bigger Navy.

MUCH BITTERNESS IN FRANCE

It Is Felt That the Country is the Centre of Dangerous Enmities and Coalitions.

Special Cables to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Oct. 14.—The German press now announces that the Government is satisfied with Great Britain's explanation of the Paris reports regarding the events which preceded M. Delcassé's resignation.

It is stated that Prince von Bülow, in a speech he will make in the Reichstag, will give a full statement on the Moroccan question, and will also reveal how, on other occasions, M. Delcassé took an unfriendly position toward Germany. The Reichstag will be opened next month.

Besides discussing foreign relations, the Chancellor will speak on the question of the meat famine in Germany, and will say that the Government sees no reason to open the market to foreign products.

Prince von Bülow will return here from Baden-Baden to-day.

BERLIN, Sunday, Oct. 15.—The North German Gazette prints at the head of its columns this morning an important semi-official communication regarding the Matin's article. It fully exonerates the French Government from any connection with the so-called revelations and frankly accepts the denial that any alliance was offered or made in London by the British Government. The article continues:

"We can state that the British Government spontaneously sent a similar communication here, and it was received on the German side with the same loyalty with which it was given. An incident between Germany and Great Britain has not been created by the assertions of the Matin. Moreover, Great Britain's communication was marked 'confidential,' and, according to the wishes of the London Government, it cannot be made public."

The article says further that all assertions that Germany asked the French or British Government for explanations regarding the statements of the Paris newspapers are incorrect, and that such a step would not be in accord with diplomatic courtesy, considering the form the publications have taken, nor "would it harmonize with the loyal sentiments with which we credit French and British statesmen."

In spite of the German Government's attitude the powerful Naval League, with its 600,000 members and all the apparatus of agitation, is already moving for a new naval programme that shall further increase Germany's resources against Great Britain.

The events of the last four months have silenced the opponents of a naval increase except the Socialists and Radicals. While time and money beyond Germany's resources would be necessary to equal Great Britain's present navy, not to speak of her future construction work, yet the feeling is that Germany must for defensive reasons build as many more ships as the country's finances will bear.

The Government some months ago decided to introduce in the Richstag a measure substituting large for small cruisers in the authorized naval programme. Whether the Government will increase the recommendations beyond this is not yet known.

PARIS, Oct. 14.—Public opinion has been wrought up during the present week by the alleged revelations of Great Britain's readiness to invade Germany on behalf of France. These revelations, following the Franco-German controversy over Morocco and the open declaration of Prince von Bülow favorable to a Russo-German rapprochement, created a feeling that France was the centre of dangerous enmities and coalitions.

The alleged disclosures became the theme for discussion throughout Europe, and the intimations that M. Delcassé was responsible for them led to violent attacks on him, one journal going so far as to accuse him of treason. M. Delcassé's repudiation of the reports, followed by the semi-official note of yesterday saying that the published reports upon the incidents accompanying the resignation of M. Delcassé were "inexact," pricked the sensational bubble; but it had, none the less, served to excite intense political bitterness in the highest circles and disclosed the sensitiveness of French statesmen to the manoeuvres of various European powers to readjust their ententes at the expense of France.

From the mass of contradictory revelations and denials the fact stands out that the Morocco controversy took Germany and France dangerously near war, and that Great Britain, while not officially promising military aid, stood ready to give France her loyal support.

The bitterness aroused by the incident is indicated by the calling of a special meeting the Association of the Parisian Press for Oct. 18 to consider charges made that certain journals are under the influence and in the pay of foreign Governments.

BERLIN STRIKE ENDED.

Electrical Workers Accept Their Employers' Original Offer.

BERLIN, Oct. 14.—The strike of the electrical workers is ended. At a conference to-day the delegates of the workingmen voted to accept the associated companies' original offer of a 5 per cent. increase in wages. The result is a complete victory for the employers.

The decision of the hardware manufacturers to lock out their 20,000 workmen unless the electrical strikers returned to work was the prevailing reason for the strikers' acceptance of the terms offered to them.

The strike was never popular with the laboring classes generally, who regarded it as more a trial of strength between the employers and the employed than as a measure of necessity.

RAID BY SPANISH PEASANTS.

Made Desperate by Hunger, They Loot a Market Place.

SEVILLE, Oct. 14.—Over a thousand farm laborers, made desperate by the existing famine, invaded the market place at Ecija (forty-eight miles from Seville) to-day, seized the entire stock of food and money, destroyed the market, and threw the town into a panic.

The authorities hastily applied for military aid.

while the Athletics rang up for a total of six against Mathewson. Mathewson fanned only three to Bender's five, but the Indian gave three passes. Mathewson proved a surprise to his admirers by poorly fielding his position. He made two errors, but they luckily resulted in nothing harmful in the net result.

Giants Get $1,141 Each.

The Giants were well rewarded for their hard work in defeating the Athletics, for by the week's labor each man to-day has a check in his wallet for $1,141.41. That is the share of each of the eighteen Giants for the series. The figures given out officially yesterday show the receipts of the first four games, from which the players derive their profit, to have been $50,730.50. The share for which the two teams struggled amounted to $27,394. Seventy-five per cent. of that amount was divided among the Giants. The remainder went in equal shares to the Athletics.

The crowd which saw yesterday's game was immense, exceeding by a small margin that of Tuesday. All the stands were filled, while men and women stood in a line ten deep back of the ropes from the right to the left field bleachers. Men hung on the fence and sat on the grandstand roof, and some peered at the game through glasses from distant poles and housetops. The crowd was there to cheer its idols, and every move was followed by a roar.

The New York management had a band on the field to enliven things until play began, and it was kept busy as the players walked to the field and started practice. As McGraw appeared on the diamond, coming from the clubhouse, he was met with a volley of applause and was obliged to lift his hat in response.

"Clinch it to-day, Mac," yelled the crowd. "Nothing but the championship will suit us now."

"That's what you'll get," he responded smilingly.

While McGraw was walking across the field the Athletics appeared from the clubhouse with Bender in the lead.

"Back to the tepee for yours," hooted a rooter. "Giants grab heap much wampum," yelled another, giving an imitation Indian yell. Bender looked at his foes in stolid silence, but smiled widely as the running fire of comments continued. James J. Corbett, with an eye for all public opportunities, walked into the field with the Giants and helped the players to warm up. He was subjected to a good deal of bantering. Just before play was called Corbett and Bresnahan posed with an Irish flag between them and were snapped by a photographer. Mathewson was the last to arrive on the scene and got a magnificent reception. He was applauded for a full minute and the crowd yelled for him to doff his cap. Instead of doing so, however, he walked over to McGinnity, the conqueror of yesterday, and ostentatiously removed Joe's headgear. McGinnity returned the compliment.

"Shake 'em up, Matty. Go after 'em," screamed the bleachers. Mathewson waved his arm as though he would do his utmost. As McGraw went to the plate to bat out in practice the band began to play:

We'll all get stone blind,
Johnnie go fill up the bowl

The crowd cheered, and a half dozen men went through the grandstand offering to bet 100 to 75 that the Giants would win the game. There were no takers.

Couldn't Rattle Bender.

Time and again Bender was yelled at, for the crowd wanted to rattle him, but its noise might as well have been directed at a steamboat, for he was impassive and cool at all stages. In one inning he gave two bases on balls in succession and the crowd jumped to its feet in glee. Bender was thunderously informed that at that particular stage he was booked for the soap factory, but stuck grimly to his task. At another time two bunts were made in succession. Again the crowd rose in its might and expressed itself as of the opinion that the chief would surely go to the happy hunting grounds, but he refused to die and stood gamely and quietly to the end.

Danny McGann was again a target for the Bender brand of curves, and added to his strike-out performance of Tuesday, when he slashed the air in a way that was distressing. The first time up yesterday McGann, with his strike-out record fresh in the minds of the fans, was cautioned to be wary and smash the ball to the earth's ends.

McGann's face bespoke ill for the future of the ball, but, much to the chagrin of the rooters, he was called out on strikes. As McGann walked toward the home bench the crowd raised a hiss of protest at Sheridan. McGraw, Dahlen, Bresnahan, and Clark had heart-to-heart talks with the indicator, but they were shooed away.

As the game proceeded the crowd saw that it was to be a magnificent pitching struggle, and both twirlers were cheered. After the fourth, when Bender had acquitted himself by retiring the Giants in one, two, three order, he was heartily applauded.

"You're the real thing: kangaroo out of the American and come to us next season," howled one fan. Bender lifted his cap in acknowledgment.

Philadelphia had men on bases in the first, second, third, fifth, and sixth innings, but couldn't get one past the second sack. In the fifth inning they came close to pushing a man to third, but Mathewson, evidently intent upon keeping his record intact, interfered. Powers had made a two-base hit to left. Bender, the next man up, lined one to Mathewson. There were two out, and by the ordinary rules of baseball the batter should have been retired. Powers started off for third, however, and Mathewson, seeing him approaching the bag, took the insult to heart. He threw quickly to Devlin, who touched the runner before he could put his spikes upon the bag.

New York made its runs in the fifth and eighth. In the fifth inning Mertes got a pass and Dahlen followed suit by passing four bad ones. With two on bases the crowd, keen for an opportunity to root, stood up and roared for Devlin to drive in a run.

"Show 'em the way to the clubhouse, Arthur," shouted Clark, who stood upon the coaching line. Devlin, however, had his orders and bunted. He sacrificed the runners to third and second, respectively and as the men chased down the line the crowd nearly yelled itself hoarse.

Besieged by the Rooters.

"Come on, Gilbert, you can do it!" roared the stands. Then came a volley of taunts to Bender, who viewed the situation with absolute imperturbability and wound up his pitching arm for New York's second baseman. But Gilbert was equal to the occasion, for he caught one of Bender's twists on the end of his bat and sent the sphere to deep left. Hartzel got under the base and caught it, but Mertes on third raced home with the first tally of the game. Then the crowd went wild and cheered everything and everybody.

In the eighth the Giants rolled up another. After Gilbert had flied to Lord, Mathewson went to the bat amid a storm of yells. He passed four bad ones, and walked. Bresnahan put an extra coat of dust upon his hands as he stalked to the plate and carefully inspected the business end of his bat. The crowd yelled for him to "Swat it off the earth!"

"Put it in a balloon, Roger, and send it away for good!" screamed the fans. Roger did the next best thing by driving the ball on a straight line to the left field bleachers. Ordinarily it would have counted for a home run, but under the ground rules he was allowed only two bases. Even Matty was enamored of the coup, for as he trotted around to third he paused, under the ground rule allowance, and clapped his hands with satisfaction. Browne, the next up, did his best to imitate Bresnahan, and swung viciously at one of Bender's curves. It went like a shot straight for the Indian. Bender grabbed at the leather, and it struck his right hand, caroming off to Murphy, who retired Browne. Matty, however, jumped across the rubber and registered a second tally.

The Giants also came within an ace of scoring in the sixth. Mathewson went out to Lord on a high fly, to be followed by Bresnahan, who bunted safely along the third-base line. The crowd wanted blood in this round, and told as much to Browne, who followed.

"Once more, boys," yelled McGraw, who was standing on the coaching line. "Let's get at the Indian here and fix 'em."

Browne was equal to the occasion and put one exactly where Roger had sent it. Donlin walked to the plate with the air of a man capable of great things.

"I'm sorry, old Pitch-Em-Heap," he remarked to Bender jokingly, "but here's where you go back to the reservation."

"Is that so?" answered Bender sarcastically. "Your conclusion, Mr. Donlin, is right in this immediate vicinity." Donlin went out to Lord, and McGann, who followed, cut off three slices of air, and walked away a heart-broken man.

When the game ended the crowd broke through the police and rushed for the players. The Giants were quick, however, and got into the clubhouse before being intercepted. Ten thousand fans surrounded the clubhouse and demanded to see their heroes. One by one the Giants appeared and were cheered. McGraw made a brief speech, in which he said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: I appreciate the great victory as well as you. I thank you for your patronage, and hope to see you all next Spring."

The Game in Detail.

Hartsel, the first batsman for the Athletics in the first inning, gave the supporters of the American League champions a little encouragement by reaching first on a hit that Dahlen came very near gathering on the fly. He stopped the ball with outstretched hand, but was unable to hold it. Lord tried bunting, but was not successful, his little fly being captured by Bresnahan in front of the plate. Davis forced Hartsel out at second, Devlin to Dahlen, and Davis had only a trifle to spare from being doubled up. The inning after this soon came to an end, as the best Lave Cross could do was to be thrown out at first by Gilbert.

For the New Yorks, Bresnahan had the first two balls pitched to him called strikes, but the third one he hit smartly to M. Cross, who was compelled to throw the ball fast to catch the runner at first. Browne hit to short, and although the ball was thrown well, the right fielder almost beat it to the base. Donlin's effort was a little hit in front of the plate, which proved troublesome for Bender to throw. He made a good attempt, however, and Davis reached out and caught the ball with one hand.

In the second inning Seybold sent the first ball pitched to left field for a base. Murphy put an easy grounder into Dahlen's hands close to second, and by a quick toss to Gilbert, and he to McGann, a sharp double play was the result. Monte Cross hit a slow ball to third base, which Devlin was totally unable to gather in time to do any execution. Cross made an attempt to steal second, but he was easily stopped by Bresnahan's pretty throw to Gilbert. The inning for the local men was short, sharp, and decisive.

McGann began by being called out on the third strike. Mertes hit well to left field, but his aspirations were checked when he tried to steal second. Dahlen failed to connect with Bender's drops, and when called out on strikes, objected to Umpire Sheridan's rulings.

Powers got to first base in the third inning on a tantalizing hit, which Mathewson was compelled to run up to, but failed to gather. The ex-Bucknell University student, however, got him at second on Bender's hit. Hartsel forced the Indian out at second, Devlin to Gilbert. Hartsel got no further than first, as Lord struck out.

Devlin did not make a very good beginning for the Giants, putting up a foul fly which Powers caught without difficulty. Gilbert was more fortunate, a neat single to centre field being the result of his efforts. He landed on second on Mathewson's sacrifice, but was left there when Bresnahan was caught out by Hartsel.

Only three men on each side went to the bat in the fourth inning. For the Athletics, Davis was easily thrown out at first by Gilbert. "Lave" Cross struck out, and Devlin had an easy task in taking Seybold's fly. For the New Yorks, Browne hit out the first ball pitched, which Hartsel took care of, and then Donlin and McGann were victims of Bender and Davis.

In the fifth inning, after Murphy had been thrown out at first by Dahlen, and M. Cross had been retired on a fly by Davis, Powers hit over the heads of the spectators in left field, which netted him two bases. In his anxiety to advance a base, however, he attempted to get to third on Bender's hit to Devlin and was easily run down by Devlin.

The fifth was a lucky inning for New York, and Bender was wild in his delivery. The first four balls pitched to Mertes gave the batsman a base. The Indian did not become any steadier when Dahlen faced him, and he, too, reached first on four bad balls. Each runner advanced a base on Devlin's sacrifice hit to L. Cross, who threw out Devlin at first. Bender pitched only two balls to Gilbert when he hit out a fly to Hartsel, and Mertes made a dash for home and Dahlen for third. The former tallied, but Cross gathered Hartsel's throw in time to catch Dahlen at third, which ended the inning.

There were four men who went to the bat for the Athletics in the sixth inning. Three reached first, but no runs were scored. Hartsel was safe on a weak hit to Mathewson, but was quickly forced out on Lord's hit, Gilbert to Dahlen. Lord was finally caught taking too much ground off first by a splendid throw of Bresnahan's. Davis hit safely to left field and this proved to be the last base hit the Athletics could get. L. Cross ended the inning by being thrown out by Devlin.

Mathewson hit the first ball pitched to centre field, which Lord captured after a good run. Bresnahan reached first on a bunt, which was rolling over the foul line when Bender picked it up. Browne followed with another bunt in the same direction. Donlin went out on a fly to centre. McGann struck out.

In the next three innings only nine of the Athletics went to the bat and only one man hit to the outfield, and that was Powers, whose fly was easily caught by Mertes. In the New York's seventh Mertes, Dahlen, and Devlin went out in succession, but in the eighth the local men scored their second run chiefly through another base on balls. With Gilbert out, Mathewson had four bad balls pitched to him, and he reached third on Bresnahan's two-base hit over the rooters in left field. Browne sent Mathewson across the plate by a hard-hit ball which caromed off Bender's hand to M. Cross, who threw out the runner at first. Donlin ended the inning by striking out.

BALLSTON, N. Y., Oct. 14.—It was announced in court here to-day that the proceedings begun some time ago to ascertain whether Mrs. Angelina Newman of Saratoga was competent to manage her affairs had been discontinued. Mrs. Newman is the widow of Bishop John P. Newman of the Methodist Church, who bequeathed her $50,000.

PHILIPPINE CHOLERA CASES.

Disease Has Practically Disappeared —713 Cases, Gov. Wright Reports.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—Reports having reached the War Department through Manila papers of an outbreak of cholera in the Philippine Islands, Secretary Taft cabled Gov. Wright to-day and received the following reply:

"Cholera has practically disappeared. From Aug. 23 to date there have been 713 cases and 553 deaths, distributed as follows:

"Province of Rizal, 449 cases, 327 deaths; Province of Cavite, 12 cases and 12 deaths; Province of Pampanga, 2 cases and 1 death; Province of Bulacan, 2 cases and 2 deaths; Province of Laguana, 34 cases and 24 deaths; Manila, Americans, 11 cases and 6 deaths; Filipinos, 180 cases, 162 deaths; foreigners, 10 cases, 15 deaths; Chinese, 4 cases and 4 deaths."

Sues Royal Arcanum Council.

PORTSMOUTH, Ohio, Oct. 14.—Capt. Nelson W. Evans, member of the Judicial Committee of Protesting Members of the Royal Arcanum, filed suit to-day, naming himself as plaintiff and the Supreme Council of the Royal Arcanum as defendant, to enjoin the collection of additional assessments due to the recent increase in rates.

THE VANDERBILT CUP RACE.

From the point of view of the automobile, of those who make it, and of those who use it, the outcome of the race for the Vanderbilt Cup over the Long Island course yesterday must have been gratifying. From any point of view it was astonishing. HEMERY, the winner of the race, made the required ten circuits of the course in his Darracq car, a total distance of 283 miles, in 4 hours, 36 minutes, and 8 seconds, which is equal to an average of 61½ miles an hour—a mile in 58½ seconds. One of the Italian cars, driven by LANCIA, made five turns of the course at an average speed just under 70 miles an hour, or at the rate of a mile in 51½ seconds. The time made by HEATH last year was only a little better than 52 miles an hour. The time of the winner this year is 9 miles an hour faster. The difference is accounted for in part by the absence of controls, this year the race being run at the pleasure of the driver all around the course, without any enforced slowing up save that demanded by prudence at the turns. It is further accounted for by the fact that the machines were this year driven much harder and probably more skillfully.

To citizens of this Republic it is most gratifying that an American-built machine, the Locomobile, was able to hold its own and finish third in this grand contest. An automobile that can bear the terrific strain and pounding of a Vanderbilt Cup race and finish at all is manifestly a pretty good machine. Of the twenty starters, many fell out through mishaps of one kind or another at various stages of the race, and there were but five cars in at the finish. TRACY'S time with the American machine was 4 hours, 58 minutes, and 26 seconds, equal to a mile in a minute and three seconds. It is a matter of National interest that American manufacturers of automobiles have demonstrated their capacity to turn out a car that will not only travel at this speed, but will pass this high test of endurance.

From the point of view of the public, there is something to be said. For one thing, the public seems, in a noticeable degree at least, to have condoned road racing by automobiles. The attendance at yesterday's race was immense—quite beyond counting or reasonable estimate, we suppose, on account of the fact that the crowd was dispersed all around the 28-mile course. The objection of the Long Island farmer has been overcome, and he has discovered that the annual race can be made a source of very considerable profit to himself. The objection in principle remains. It is doubtless contrary to sound public policy that any part of the highway should be given up at any time of day to the use of vehicles traveling at these frightful speeds. The nature of the contest may be well judged by the fact that there was universal and complacent comment upon the fact that not only were none of the drivers or machinists killed, but none of the spectators met death. This sufficiently indicates that road racing with automobiles at the rate of from sixty to eighty miles an hour is a pastime not devoid of peril. To those who condemn the practice there will be great comfort in the reflection that next year's race for the Vanderbilt Cup must be held in France, the trophy having been won two years in succession by a French car.

PROGRESS ON THE ISTHMUS.

In one department of Panama Canal work highly gratifying progress has been made. We refer to the department of expenditure. There we have observed no unseemly delay, no sloth, no want of zeal. Under the direction of Congress, of the President, and of the Commission $60,000,000 of the people's money has already been spent. There is a great source of comfort and security in the feeling that this work, at least, cannot be undone. The Frenchmen have received their forty millions, and will keep it. The Republic of Panama has got its ten millions. The money that the Commission has spent on the work, or in getting ready for the work, or in explaining that it was not yet time to go to work, is also permanently invested.

For all this expenditure we have acquired and have on our hands an interesting situation. It develops new features of interest almost daily. The Commission as getting out of a contract made by its Chairman and subsequently, after due examination, approved by the President. The contract in question was one nominally entered into between the Panama Railroad and Mr. MARKEL, a purveyor of food and lodgings. Really, the contract was made by Mr. SHONTS, who on his own responsibility awarded to Mr. MARKEL the contract to house and nourish the workmen and staff employed on the canal. There was a good deal of criticism of Mr. SHONTS's procedure in this matter, but the President stood by him and he could afford to laugh at his critics. Now Mr. MARKEL begs off, and the Commission is glad to release him. Engineer STEVENS, through the Department of Materials and Supplies, will furnish board and lodgings to the canal employés. It is a situation which, to put it mildly, excites some curiosity.

A few days ago Washington dispatches brought other interesting news about the Commission and Mr. SHONTS. It was declared that Secretary TAFT had insisted with all the emphasis of his rugged physique and firm character that if he was to assume the direction of the Panama Canal work he must be altogether unhampered; there must be no co-ordinate authority or control; there must be nobody coming between him and the President, and to the President alone would he acknowledge responsibility. This was construed as indicating the existence or the possibility of friction between Secretary TAFT and Chairman SHONTS. The correspondent of The Baltimore Sun, in an acute analysis of the situation, intimated that it was as a friend and protector of the Revised Statutes that the Secretary had taken this determined stand. Mr. SHONTS, as a builder and developer of great railroads for private corporations, had acquired a habit of beating down or smashing through the obstacles that stood in his way. In a Government undertaking like the construction of the Isthmian Canal he found himself confronted with legal limitations, hampering laws, and statutory red tape the breaking or disregard of which was likely to bring on a train of annoyances and embarrassments, such as fines, imprisonment, and the like. Mr. SHONTS has attentively studied the history of his country, and the lives of its leading statesmen. In particular he has made himself acquainted with the career of the present President of the United States. Possibly it was because he recognized in him a kindred soul, because he observed in the President an impatience of statutory obstacles with which he deeply sympathized, that he expressed a desire to be responsible to the President only, and under his direction to have full authority. It was at that point that he came into collision with the Secretary of War. There was for a day or two some talk of a weak compromise. Somebody suggested that the canal work be transferred to the State Department. Secretary ROOT, who at any moment during the last twenty-five years could probably have passed creditably a civil service examination on the history of the Panama Canal undertaking, would have none of it, and said so. Then Mr. TAFT laid down his ultimatum. There the matter rests, and everybody is waiting to see what Chairman SHONTS will do about it.

There is further news of the canal. The Commission, the engineers, and the advisory engineers have been down looking at it. They gazed at the Chagres River; they examined the site of the Bohio Dam, and probably took soundings by running their walking sticks into the soil; they slept on board their ship in order that they might have undisturbed leisure to think out and describe sanitary conditions ashore; finally they sailed for home, and will presently report to the President whether we shall build a lock canal or a sea-level canal. A few days ago six hundred Jamaica laborers quit work on the canal and sailed for home. Things are flying on the Isthmus. Money flies, time flies, the germ-laden mosquito flies, and the laborers flee. Everything flies but dirt.

CHUSAN.

Shall Great Britain break her renewed pledge to Japan and the world of the "independence and territorial integrity of the Chinese Empire" by demanding from China, in consideration of her withdrawal from the now useless base at Wei-hai-wei, and as an offset to the German occupation of Kiao-chau, a lease for ninety-nine years of a naval station on Chusan Island, commanding the estuary of the Yangtse River? That, in effect, is the question proposed by DEMETRIUS C. BOULGER in The Contemporary Review for October. Mr. BOULGER says:

> The Viceroys of Central China would pay no more heed to the tales of the decadence of England, pressed on their credibility by every carpet bagger from the Elbe and the Rhine, when they knew that our squadron always rode at anchor but a few hours' steaming from the great river.

This proposal, if executed, would furnish an effective reply to Count HATZFELDT'S statement of Germany's policy in 1898, which his Government has since consistently maintained, > that Germany, by her occupation of Kiao-chau and her agreement with China respecting Shantung, has acquired a special position in that province, which consequently is not unreservedly open to British enterpriae, whereas Great Britain not having occupied any place in the Yang-tse region, that region is still unreservedly open to German enterprise.

Chusan was the centre of British enterprise in the seventeenth century. In the days of the old East India Company, at least upon this side of the Atlantic. It will be as an international figure; as one of the earliest and most important contributors to that "understanding" between the two great English-speaking peoples which we are in the habit of saying, after dinner, and partly of believing, is the best guarantee for the peace and the progress of the world. Years before he ever saw these shores, many traveling Americans had been beholden to him for courtesies and kindnesses which could have been nothing but the expression of a heart as kind as his head was sound. It is quite incomputable how great a public service he rendered to both nations concerned, and on both sides of the water, simply by obeying the dictates of a generous nature. Dr. JOHNSON, after rehearsing the praises of GARRICK in tragedy and comedy, wound up with saying, "And, after all, I thought him most to be envied at the head of a table." There are hundreds of Americans, as well as, perhaps, thousands of Englishmen, who are ready to echo these words in the praise of that one of GARRICK'S successors who has come nearest to taking GARRICK'S artistic place.

SMASHING OF IDOLS.

The sculptor who in a fit of petulance took his little mallet and smashed the plaster casts of certain lady angels in the first chapel to be completed for the Protestant Cathedral has only deepened his original offense in the eyes of the orthodox. Before that tragic blow he was merely a misguided Koroplastes who saw too much through the rosy spectacles that are tinted by the charms of EVE'S exquisite daughters. Now he has fallen to the savage grade of the Iconoclast, and, what is worse, has lifted his hand against the sex he sought to honor. Confused by the texts hurled against him; overcome by the limelight cast on him by an unscrupulous and too often scoffing press, this ingenuous-pure and guileless sculptor was seized by temporary madness when he cracked the lovely crown of the Archangeless GABRIELLE the annunciatrix and smote the marble brow of ASRAELA, that female seraph of the Resurrection. It is indeed a dangerous path along which das Ewigweibliche draws us on and upward, for it includes passages of anger close on the borders of hysteria which we afterward regret.

It seems to us that Mr. GUTZON BORGLUM might have put up a stiffer fight against the dictum of gentlemen from up the State on whose skirts one may perhaps detect bits of straw and a sporadic burdock burr or two. Peering from the remotest horizons of history we see the forms of female as well as male divinities; and their attendant spirits are equally divided as to sex. Curiously enough, even certain special professions assigned to men alone, like war and the hunt, are very commonly ruled by goddesses either grim or genial—Artemis, Athena, Bellona, the Irish Morrigu, the Scandinavian Valkyr. Even when he went to war, the man of primitive culture liked to place himself under the care of a woman. He might have argued that all the gods were once in pairs, as one sees in Babylonian, and almost equally well in Greek and Latin, myth. In one case the god has survived, in another the goddess, in a third both are retained. Although we have the best authority of the New Testament that there is no marriage or giving in marriage in heaven, it does not follow that the external shapes of celestial beings are masculine only. On the contrary, just as heaven involves hell and angels cannot be imagined without their opposites, the demons of the pit, so the fashioning by artists of the deity as a man compels the antithesis or complement of the woman. To frame angels as neutral beings neither male nor female is a cowardly begging of the question, even worse than the bodiless heads, with wings, of the painters of angels a century or two ago.

It is a pity to see an artist retire under fire in this way. Let Mr. BORGLUM stick to his sweet girl graduates of the heavenly choir. This mediaeval attempt to rule women out of heaven should rouse the societies and clubs of women to a protest against such vain attempts of man to extend his tyranny to the other world.

SIR HENRY IRVING.

As an actor, Sir HENRY IRVING was the "wonder of his stage," at least of the English-speaking stage. And he was the wonder of the stage precisely because he lacked the physical, and sometimes one was inclined to say even the temperamental, "means" of a great actor. Compare him, in any physical gift, with SALVINI, for example, the Italian tragedian, "framed in the prodigality of nature" for his special work, of whose Othello it was said that it was a delight for a deaf man to look at it, or for a blind man to listen to it. Sir HENRY, on the other hand, did not present a heroic or gallant figure. He was tall, to be sure. But he had, instead of the actor's gallant pose, the scholar's stoop. He was not shapely, and London even maintained that his legs were not mates, to which the answer of OSCAR WILDE is worth remembering: "Ah, but the right is a beauty and the left is a poem." His voice was but a chronic catarrh. That a man so imperfectly gifted should have been able to make himself so impressive on the stage is one of the wonders of histrionism. "Superiority of intellect"—that is really the explanation of his dramatic success. His conception of his characters was so just and thoughtful, and his industry in giving effect to that conception was so untiring, that he triumphed over defects which, if he had been less intelligent and less resolute, would have prevented him from being an actor at all.

As a manager, his intelligence again came into play, and here it was not physically handicapped. His first season in New York showed playgoers that, liberally and even extravagantly as plays had been "mounted" before, great plays had not been so sympathetically and intelligently put upon our stage. The careful and successful attention to detail was a revelation to our stage managers. More money had been spent upon previous revivals of "The Merchant of Venice" than was spent upon his. But so much brains had not before been bestowed. Those scenes still linger in the memory of New York playgoers—the Venetian canal by moonlight—the trial scene in which the behoider realized the truth of the French painter's saying: "One makes a crowd with five persons, or else not with fifty." Indeed, the substitution of intelligence for extravagance was as much the lesson of his stage management as the triumph of mind over matter was the lesson of his acting.

But it was neither as an actor nor as a manager that Sir HENRY will be really no evidence at all.

We remark with interest that the cognoscenti of baseball are inclined to scout our suggestion that the bat should be flattened (by the way, we never said widened, also) in order to put the batsman more nearly on an equality with the pitcher. But we also remark that, however much they may disagree with our conclusion, they agree to our premise that the preponderance of the pitcher is injurious to the interest of the game. The pitcher, in fact, is too important a player, and the other players are too unimportant. The better pitcher, or the luckier, wins the game, in professional baseball as now conducted. Whether the flattening of the bat be the device to put the two sides more nearly on an equality, or whether it be some other device, is not important. The important thing is that some device to that end should be sought and found.

SALVATION ARMY COLONISTS.

Australia, much in need of labor, would welcome the increment to her population which Gen. BOOTH of the Salvation Army proposes, but would like to pick the kind. It does not want semi-paupers, the wrecks drifted into the sargasso seas of cities, the raft of incapables who through drink, misconduct, or misfortune, or all three working together, have failed in the effort to make a living at home. This is not the kind of help it wants to extend the industrial interests of the country. Unfortunately, it is the kind which Gen. BOOTH, left in the unrestrained exercise of his piety and philanthropy, would be most likely to purvey. The healthy, vigorous, and uncontaminated yeomen workers such as Australia would like to get are wanted at home much more than the nobility are, in point of fact, and quite as urgently as any class of the population. They, indeed, cannot be spared without working serious industrial injury in the agriculture of the country.

JESSE COLLINGS, M. P., recognized as one of the highest authorities on this subject, says that owing to the draining away of its labor rural England has already become a sparsely populated country, with large areas in it either a desert or fast becoming one. There are millions of acres out of cultivation and given over to cattle and sport, with no restoration possible except at the hands of the class of workers which Australia would like to drain off to fortify her farm and grazing industries, much in need of that class of help to keep them going. The Salvation Army class of colonists are not called for with any kind of enthusiasm, and Gen. BOOTH has in consequence cabled to Prime Minister DEAKIN at Melbourne withdrawing his proposal to send them, owing to the various difficulties offered to the successful carrying out of the scheme. To get rid of a part of her surplus population is a social economic need which England now faces, with no foreign demand for the same to be described as urgent anywhere around the rim of the world.

There is a market for labor of various kinds, skilled and unskilled, in both the Americas, in South Africa, and some of the English possessions in the East, but a condition of selling it is that it must be efficient and fill the bill. That is not the kind which the great army of English derelicts has to dispose of, more's the pity, and the empire will have to wrestle with the problem which they present to it as best it can. Some solution of it will, no doubt, be found, the remedy being gradually operative, but it does not now seem as if it was going to come through the colonizing efforts of the Salvation Army.

Another One.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For a century past, probably longer, the rule of the best printers and publishers has been: "Three words in the same construction are separated by commas."

Two examples will illustrate the rule:

"John, James and Thomas have come."

As so punctuated the first name is vocative, the second and third nominative. Two persons have come.

"John, James, and Thomas have come."

And now the three names are all nominatives. Three persons have come.

The two meanings can be indicated otherwise only by a footnote. M. V. Z.

Virginia Apples.

From The Baltimore Sun.

Rockingham County, Va., does well this season with a twenty-five-thousand-barrel crop of apples, but Berkeley County, West Va., with its one-hundred-and-fifty-thousand-barrel crop, breaks the record. The Berkeley apple crop will bring, it is stated, $275,000. Not only is the yield unprecedented, but the quality is fine. Buyers are at hand in great numbers to take the output of entire orchards, picking the apples and paying a good price. What Berkeley County does other adjacent counties of Virginia and Maryland could probably do if they tried.

Previously Tainted.

From The Chicago Tribune.

If Dr. Pearsons had cared to rub it in on the Board of Foreign Missions he could have invited attention to the fact that he had given $75,000 previously to that same Anatolia College at Marsovan, Turkey, and that it had been accepted without a murmur.

Makes the Mare Go.

From The Washington tSar.

"Aren't you ashamed to swear at that mule in that manner?" asked the respected citizen.

"Yes," answered the driver, "but I ain't as 'shamed as I would be to swear at a golf ball or an automobile or something else that couldn't possibly take notice. I've at least got an object in view."

The Natural Effect.

From The Chicago Tribune.

END OF THE BASEBALL SEASON.

At the beginning of this last week, there were certain cynics in New York, and perhaps there were such in Philadelphia, who maintained that the deciding series between the champions, respectively, of the National and of the American League would be conducted strictly according to the chances of "the gate," without reference to the merits of the teams. It is a pleasure to own that these predictions have been falsified. To verify them in the highest degree, each team should have won three games, and then the deciding game should have been played in New York, not as the more enthusiastic of the two cities, but only as the more populous.

In fact, Philadelphia has won only one of the games actually played. And nobody who saw that game will give any credit to any report that it was not played, on both sides, sincerely and for all it was worth. It is true that one game was not played because the "gate" did not justify the exertion, the thin pretext for not playing it being that the day was showery and threatening. But it is one thing for a team to "throw" a game, and quite another for it to decline to exert itself to its utmost before a small congregation of the faithful. For the Weak Points in the System Shown by Recent Cases.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is something radically wrong with our method of selecting jurors when foreigners unacquainted with our language and ignorant natives are chosen to try important cases. The other day an Italian, John De Salvo, after sitting as a juror in the important Du Bois will case for two days, walked up to Judge Kellogg and asked to be excused, saying, "Me no understand English good, Judge." The jurors in the case had all taken their places in the jury box as their names were called, without being asked anything except, "Do you know any reason why you should not serve on this case?" and as the other eleven men said nothing, John did likewise.

A number of years ago I sat as a juror in a case where a saloon keeper was suing a bank. The bank had discounted a note for him. When he went to settle he handed the cash to the teller and received his note in exchange. Two years afterward he sued the bank, claiming that his account should have been credited with the amount, whereas in fact he was simply paying his indebtedness to the bank and took the evidence of the indebtedness away with him. The bank teller, who had been discharged after the transaction occurred, was at the trial to testify in favor of the plaintiff. The jury was composed of men who knew little or nothing about banking methods, and although the case was very clear, they seemed determined to bring in a verdict against the bank. It took a great deal of argument on my part to convince them that the bank was right.

I think it is safe to say that in most cases disagreements are due to a poor selection of jurors. The majority of our most intelligent citizens seldom serve. Ministers, lawyers, and doctors are not obliged to, and many of our most capable men in mercantile pursuits join military companies in order to be exempt. I have heard successful business men brag that they had been able for years to escape this form of public service. They either have a pull, or, if rich enough, pay a fine.

I served as a juror in this city for upward of forty years, and I consider it a duty every man owes to himself as well as to the State to render such service. When a man has a case of his own come to trial he is anxious to secure the very best possible jury, but how may he expect to do so when he is unwilling to serve others? HENRY DEXTER.

SEND HIM TO COVENTRY.

Mr. Putnam's Idea of the Way to Eliminate the Football Slugger.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In my opinion the dirty work in football will never cease until a sentiment has been created in the college world making the attitude toward all unfair play similar to that of the decent part of the community toward the man who cheats at cards.

At present a player caught at some flagrant piece of foul play is sometimes reluctantly punished mildly by the umpire. It is merely considered hard luck for him that he has not been skillful enough in following the clever instructions of his coach to avoid being caught.

If the act itself were considered dishonorable and the guilty man were kicked out of the team and sent to Coventry, there would soon be an end of such incidents as are constantly occurring in football games. Until this dirty work is wiped out entirely football can never take that high position as a clean, manly sport to which it is otherwise so well entitled.

IN ROCKEFELLER'S DEFENSE.

His Only Offense That of Making Money, Says One Champion.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The following statement by Bishop Samuel Fallows of Chicago, "Mr. Rockefeller is now seeing that morality cannot be divorced from business. Let him use his immense wealth in undoing that wrong which he has done, confessing his guilt"; then, "fully forgiven, both by God and man, he will rise at once to be the St. John of the twentieth century," I wish to question. I have never seen Mr. Rockefeller, never had a cent of his money, or the benefit of the countless good that his money has given to colleges, hospitals, missions, and other charities, yet I marvel at his patience. Why does not a single professor or student at that wonderful Chicago University rise up and say something in reply to the awful things we read from the pen of Miss Tarbell? Is there no one who is reaping the benefit of all the vast sums of money spent for the education of young men and women who can say a word for such a benefactor? We have other wealthy men, some whose wealth is nearly as great as Rockefeller's and acquired in ways that could not be "married to morals." They spend their money on their pleasures, are seen at the fashionable centres, and are read about in the society news. No one finds fault with them. But Rockefeller—no one has the courage to rise and confess his friendship or to express his gratitude.

For six months I have tried to fasten some guilt upon this man, and I found his sin has been that he knew his opportunity to make money, he had exceptional opportunity, and he has the capacity to see and hold it as it came his way.

Baseball All Right as It Is?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to disagree with your editorial writer who found fault with baseball because of its seeming advantage to the pitcher and disadvantage to the batsman. I am sure he has been led astray by witnessing one unusual contest wherein a pitcher that a team had never faced before was able to deceive it into a shut out.

Under ordinary conditions, I think, plenty of room for the batsman's skill will be found, especially where the bunt hit is used freely and the pitcher is compelled to do good fielding as well as good pitching.

I think he will also discover that the success of many pitchers depends upon the speed and deadly accuracy with which the infields behind them operate. Given the fast infields of the Giants and Athletics, it is difficult for any batsman to get a ground ball outside the diamond, no matter who is pitching. Given an infield a bit slow and the best pitcher will not be found very effective.

And I hold that no true lover of the sport of baseball would wish to alter in any degree the system which so beautifully draws out fast, accurate play by the infield. A ROOTER.

Punishing Poachers.

From The Montreal Gazette.

Mr. Shaw, the Secretary of the United States Treasury, ordered the release of the tug Valiant, arrested by a revenue cruiser for illegally fishing in Canadian waters. Perhaps this was all that he could do with the rascal. Poaching in another country's territory might be as bard to punish by law as to defend in morals.

A Correspondent Thinks the Cunard Company Is Wronged.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to the notice which appeared in your issue of the 12th inst. as to the Postmaster General having contracted with the International Mercantile Marine Company (the shipping combine) to carry the United States mails to England, via Plymouth, for a period of ten years at the rate of $4 per mile, it would be interesting to know upon what grounds this contract was given to this combine. It is evident that the steamers which will be paid for this service are the four ships of the so-called American Line, the St. Louis, St. Paul, New York, and Philadelphia.

If this contract was given to this company on the ground of efficient service, the fallacy of this will be apparent by comparing the average time taken by the four steamers named between this Post Office and the London Post Office, with the average time taken by the four steamers of the Cunard Line, which sail from here the same day. It will be seen that the difference is many hours in favor of the Cunard steamers.

On the other hand, if the contract was given to this company in a spirit of patriotism, all that can be said in favor of this contention is that these four ships fly the American flag. In every other respect they are British and are managed entirely by British subjects, who draw immense salaries from their earnings. It is commonly known that not a dollar for repairs to these American (?) ships is permitted by the management to be spent in this country, and nothing is spent over here for other requisites beyond what is actually required to carry the ship to a British port.

It may be possible that Mr. Ismay threatened to place these four so-called American ships under the British flag if this mail contract was not given to their owners. It would be but a small loss if he did, as they are no benefit to the labor market or the tradesmen of New York, and without the aid of this American contract most of these ships would, no doubt, be laid up here or in some Liverpool dock from December to May.

What a quandary Mr. Cortelyou will be in if the Cunard Company, in the face of this contract, decline to carry any American mails from this port except on the same terms as those granted to these combine ships or a less efficient service than the Cunard Company could guarantee!

I contend that the Cunard Company will be quite justified in adopting such a course, and, unless I am much mistaken, it is on record that the Cunard Company did, some years ago, decline to carry any American mails on their ships through just such unfair treatment as the above.

As I have said above, it will be interesting to know Mr. Cortelyou's reason for giving this valuable contract to these ships of the Shipping Trust.

Want Another St. Patrick.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The admissions and candid portrayal of himself by "Exile of Dublin" are in keeping with tens of thousands of others who unfortunately inhabit dear old Ireland. Although Erin rid herself centuries ago of all kinds of reptiles, she is still infested and cursed with a creeping, crawling, cringing brood of British reptilians which puts the other poor dumb creatures deeply in the shade, besides making the struggle for liberty so long and so hard. Oh! for another St. Patrick to drive those snakes into the deep, deep sea. J. McCORMACK.

Mr. Jerome.

From The Springfield Republican.

Tammany has refused to indorse Mr. Jerome, much to his satisfaction, perhaps. He can now display his powers as an independent campaigner without the taint of alliances that would have gnawed into so intrepid and incorruptible a soul. His canvass and vote will demonstrate just how much New York wants a public prosecutor of his stamp. It is understood that the big insurance men, who have been under investigation, are not anxious for Mr. Jerome's re-election.

New Jersey's Census.

From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

TRENTON, Oct. 6.—The population of New Jersey, now announced for the first time since the census was completed, is 2,144,144. The schedule of a compilation for the twelve principal cities shows the following:

INTIMATE MEMORIES OF SIR HENRY'S CAREER

His Generosity and Sense of Humor Recalled by Actors.

COINCIDENCE IN HIS DEATH

Omitted Bradford from His Bookings After Repeated Illness Preventing His Appearance There.

Fuller Mellish, an English actor, at present a member of Richard Mansfield's company, was for ten years associated with Sir Henry Irving, and in the course of a conversation yesterday he recalled many incidents of the great actor's life of a more intimate nature than are ordinarily the subjects of publication.

"It is perhaps only a coincidence," he said, "but nevertheless a most peculiar one, that Sir Henry Irving should have died in the town of Bradford, for it was for a number of years a place associated with superstition in his mind and in that of people who had been members of his company. Sir Henry had possibly played in Bradford in his early, struggling days, but after his Lyceum successes he did not include the town in his itinerary up to a time, about eight or nine years ago, when I happened to be in his company. We were then billed to play there in "Sans Gêne." Just before we started Sir Henry, who was on a visit to Lord Rosebery, was taken ill, and the trouble developed into pneumonia. The company went to Bradford and the piece was given with an understudy as Napoleon, but Sir Henry remained in Edinburgh. On his very next tour Bradford was again billed, but strangely enough, Sir Henry was again taken ill just prior to our departure for the place and could not accompany us. After that Bradford was cut from the route entirely. I am inclined to believe that it had never since been included up to the present season."

***

Mr. Mellish's boy is named after Sir Henry. On the occasion of the child's christening the actor journeyed from London to act as godfather and share in the general festivities of the occasion. Now the young son of the house of Mellish, it seems, was not agreeably impressed with the ceremonies, and persisted in setting up such a squalling and bellowing that the minister who officiated had to pause several times. Later, as Irving stepped into his brougham to drive home, he turned to the father and remarked:

"That's a lusty young beggar, that boy of yours." Then, very confidentially, "but I say if you think of making an actor of him you must teach him to wait for his cues."

***

That he could appreciate a joke even when it was on himself is illustrated in the following incident: The company was playing at Bristol, and Sir Henry, living at Clifton, an old-fashioned health resort, about two miles away, was in the habit of taking a morning constitutional along the suspension bridge at that place, then driving to the theatre for rehearsal.

"On the morning in question I was coming along the bridge," said Mr. Mellish, "and I met Sir Henry walking in the opposite direction. It was bitter cold and the snow and sleet made the roadway almost impassable. Sir Henry greeted me pleasantly and then added very thoughtfully: 'It's thawing, I think.'

"'No, it's freezing,' I replied.

"'I think you're wrong,' he said. The words were hardly out of his mouth when his feet slipped from under him and he came down with a thud. After I had helped him up and gathered in his hat and stick, which had been precipitated in the roadway, he turned to go. He had gone only about three steps when he suddenly turned around:

***

On one occasion the members of a provincial theatrical company decided to teach a lesson to a member of the organization who was noted for his bumptiousness and conceit. The aggregation was playing in Aberdeen, and one of the wags wrote a letter to the actor, signing Sir Henry's name to the document and telling him he was wanted for a production at the Lyceum. It was supposed that the conceited fellow would show the letter to his fellow-players, and the intention was to tell him of the hoax, after he had boasted sufficiently. But in this case the actor made no mention of the matter whatsoever. Instead, he boarded a train for London that night. The plotters were dumfounded. The joke had gone too far. Here was this actor taking a fourteen-hour journey to London, only to be confronted with disappointment at the end of his trip. As it happened, however, Sir Henry allowed the visitor to come to his dressing room and read the letter. He at once scented the joke, but without a word by way of disclosure asked the actor to name his salary and engaged him. The interesting part of the anecdote, from the actor's standpoint, lies in the fact that the man "made good," and for fourteen years remained in the Irving company, ultimately attaining a position of great prominence in the profession.

***

A prominent American actor who had just appeared in London met Irving at his club. The American was bemoaning the fact that after his first nights he was always voiceless.

"It leaves me in an awful state of hoarseness," he said. "Really, it is most painful to me."

"Indeed," said Sir Henry. "Why do you act at all?"

***

"The only time I ever saw Sir Henry in tears," said Mr. Mellish, "was when 'Fussy' died in Manchester. 'Fussy' was a fox terrier, bred in the stables of Lord Falmouth, who gave him to Ellen Terry. The little dog eventually came into Irving's hands and for years was his constant companion. Old, lame, and blind, he was so attached to his master that he would have nothing to do with any of the rest of us. Sir Henry had just finished a performance of 'The Battle of Waterloo' when some one brought word that 'Fussy' had fallen down a trap and broken his neck. The news was kept from Irving, but, as was his custom, he called the dog as soon as the curtain was down. Everybody stood by silently, but none of us could make up our minds to tell him the truth. Finally Irving saw that something was wrong. He looked from one to the other of us.

"'Don't tell me he's dead,' he said.

And as he realized that such was the case, he broke down completely and sobbed like a child.

***

Stories of Sir Henry's goodness of heart to the members of his company are innumerable. Mr. Mellish cited an occasion when he had been ill and called to see the actor regarding his further association with the organization. "You look as though you need a change," said Sir Henry. "Go to the treasurer and get three weeks' salary. After you have spent it come back and start to work." The actor, after receiving the money, discovered that it contained £5 more than the three weeks' stipend. He so informed the treasurer. "Oh, yes," said that official, "I forgot to mention it. Sir Henry said that you looked as though you needed plenty of sun and air. The extra money is for carriages so you won't tire yourself out while you're looking for it."

***

Another actor in this city who was for many years associated with Sir Henry is J. E. Dodson, now playing in "The Prodigal Son." Mr. Dodson tells many interesting stories of his association with the great actor.

In circumstances that would have enraged a less gentle and finely balanced man, Sir Henry Irving never lost his temper for a moment, but simply indulged in a sly bit of sardonic humor.

Mr. Dodson relates this story of old Tom Meade, beloved by all English players, and said to have been the best stock ghost that any company ever had. Meade was much given to reading in his dressing room between cues. "Hamlet" was on one night, and after Tom had made his first entrance and exit he went to his room to enjoy the long wait before the closet scene. With his heels on the dressing table, his stub of a black clay pipe in his mouth, and his silver-rimmed spectacles astride his nose, he was soon lost in a chapter of deep philosophy and oblivious to all else. The call boy gave him notice of his cue.

"Um, yes," he said, without looking up from his book.

A few moments later there was feverish excitement in the wings, and emissaries from the stage manager came pouring into Tom's room. Down below the light had been lowered, the stage was enveloped in a blue haze, but there was no ghost!

Throwing his book aside, Meade jumped for the stage. In his haste he entered on the wrong side almost behind Hamlet. It was too late to go around to the other side, and in a husky whisper he called to Irving:

"Here, Sir, here, behind you."

Just about this time the man who operated the calcium light succeeded in locating the dilatory ghost and threw the blue haze upon him as Hamlet exclaimed:

"See where he goes e'en now, out at the portal."

Poor Tom was in agony until he had an interview with his chief.

"Gov'n'r," he faltered, "reading in my dressing room. Call heard and forgotten. Rushed to wrong side of stage, Sir. Very sorry, Sir. Never happened before. Never will again, Sir. And after all it didn't look so bad, Gov'n'r."

For a moment Sir Henry looked him through and through. Then in icy terms he answered:

"Yes, Tom, but I like it bettah the othah way."

***

Sir Henry was devotedly fond of children. When he was playing "Olivia," the juvenile part was taken by a little lad about 9 years old. The little fellow kept himself very tidy, but his clothes were old, and it was evident that he was extremely poor.

"Where do you live, my boy?" asked Mr. Irving one night.

"Beyond Hemmersmith," answered the lad.

"And how do you get home?" continued Mr. Irving.

"Yes, yes. But after this you must ride." And Mr. Irving gave orders that the lad's 'bus fare was to be paid thereafter. Some time later he noticed that the little fellow had a troubled look on his face. He asked him if he enjoyed riding. That brought forth the fact that the boy had been saving the 'bus fare, as his mother was ill and his father out of work.

Mr. Irving immediately ordered that the child's salary be raised. Through the Summer, although the company was not playing, the child received his salary just the same, at the personal order of his great patron.

***

"The most whimsical of his affairs with children," relates Mr. Dodson, "occurred while he was doing a one-act play, 'Cramond Brig,' in which there is a supper scene in the cottage, where the King is in hiding. A steaming sheep's head and an oat cake are brought in, and the cotter's boy is supposed to do boyish justice to the feast. The little fellow who was playing the part didn't look as though he had eaten more than the allowance. Of course, the sheep's head, being prepared for stage purposes, was indifferently cooked, the main point being that it should send up a cloud of steam and look piping hot. One night Sir Henry observed that the boy entered into the spirit of the scene with great realism.

"'Like it, me boy?' he inquired, as he smiled with amusement at the lad's energy.

"'Ah, yes. I thought so. All boys are always hungry.'

No sooner was the boy out of hearing than he gave orders that the sheep's head and oat cake were to be carefully cooked and seasoned in the future, and he instructed the players that the supper scene was not to be hurried, but that its length was to be governed by the boy's appetite.

***

Irving retained faithful old members of his company long after their services might have been dispensed with if only business considerations prevailed. One of the most touching cases of this character was that of "Daddy" Howe, who died in Cincinnati some years ago while the company was touring here. At one of the most memorable dinners given to Irving by the members of the profession, "Daddy" Howe arose, and with tears streaming down his face, told how his proposal to retire had been received. At this time he was 80 years old. When Howe learned that the company was to come to America he realized that the expense would be very great, and that the minor rôles he played could be easily filled over here at a much less cost. As a result of these gloomy reflections he wrote Mr. Irving that he appreciated the situation and would either retire or accept a reduced salary. Not receiving an answer, he brought the matter up at a personal interview.

"Dear me. Ah, yes. Well, I'll let you know presently," was Mr. Irving's evasive reply.

"Daddy" Howe thought from this that he was undoubtedly doomed to retirement. With trembling fingers he opened a note that came from Mr. Irving the next day and read:

"Of course I expect you to go, and I hope that the increase in your salary will indicate my appreciation and good wishes."

Fair for St. Rose of Lima's Church.

A fair, which will begin next Saturday evening, and will last a week, is being managed by the congregation of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Rose of Lima at Parkville. It will be held in the School Hall, which has been handsomely decorated and equipped with booths. The programme provides for a different attraction every evening, including a musical euchre, as well as dancing for the young people every night. One of the most interesting features of the fair will be a Japanese pagoda in charge of the Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association.

PLAN FOR NATIONAL MEMORIAL TO IRVING

Meeting to be Held in London To-morrow to Discuss It.

BURIAL MAY BE IN ABBEY

Body to Reach the Capital To-day—Expressions of Sorrow in England—Flags Half Masted.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The body of Sir Henry Irving will reach London at 3:20 o'clock to-morrow morning. It will be conveyed here in a funeral car attached to the regular train from Bradford. It will be accompanied by Sir Henry's sons, Henry B. and Lawrence, Bram Stoker, and the other members of his business staff, and personal friends. Immediately on its arrival the body will be taken to Sir Henry Irving's residence.

Notwithstanding the request that no flowers be sent, several magnificent floral pieces have already reached Bradford and have been placed on the coffin. Telegrams of condolence are pouring in from all parts of the country.

Flags were at halfmast on many of the theatres in London to-day and the afternoon and evening performances in the theatres throughout the country closed with the playing of the "Dead March." At the Queen's Hall concert Chopin's Funeral March was played, the vast audience standing.

Ellen Terry, who is playing at Birmingham, is reported to be completely prostrated with grief. She did not appear at to-night's performance.

A meeting will be held in London on Monday at which a proposition for a national memorial will take shape. It is understood to be extremely probable that Sir Charles Wyndham will propose the endowment of a national theatre in Irving's name.

Suggestions are heard in some quarters that the burial take place in Westminster Abbey, in Poets' Corner, where lie the bodies of Garrick, Mrs. Siddons, and other theatrical celebrities. No definite funeral arrangements have yet been made, but it is understood that the family desire that they be as simple as possible.

Seldom has the death of a public man in England called out such universal expressions of sorrow as have followed the death of Sir Henry Irving. Appreciations, histories of his career, and stories of his many-sided activities fill the newspapers. His last words on the stage as the curtain was rung down on the death of Becket, "Through night to light. Into Thy hands, O Lord! Into Thy hands!" were practically the last he uttered, as he never spoke after his collapse in the hall of the hotel where he died.

Members of the company now recall that Sir Henry showed signs of exhaustion and overstrain during the past week, though they did not attract particular attention at the time. In the performance of "The Bells" at Bradford on Thursday the veteran actor delivered many passages seated instead of with his customary freedom of movement on the stage. Once or twice last night toward the close of the performance Sir Henry was seen to support himself on the stage, but in response to the applause of the audience be appeared before the curtain and acknowledged the cordiality of his reception.

In view of the doctor's certificate the Coroner decided that an inquest was not necessary.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Mr. Conried has just made an arrangement with the Metropolitan Opera House orchestra which he believes will add to the efficiency of that organization. Owing to conditions which existed at the Metropolitan, the management had in the past been unable to secure the services of the orchestra for rehearsal purposes till at the utmost one week before the opening of each season. Mr. Conried has now succeeded in obtaining control of his orchestra from Oct. 15 on. As a consequence, instead of the five or six preliminary rehearsals there will this year be between thirty and forty before the curtain goes up on the opening night. These will be followed by others, numbering probably altogether eight-five during the season.

***

Raoul Pugno, the French pianist, will make his reappearance in this city with the Russian Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall on Saturday evening, Nov. 18, instead of in a recital on the same day, as previously announced. With the orchestra he is to play the second concerto of Rachmaninoff, which will be heard here for the first time. Pugno will begin his recital series in Mendelssohn Hall the week following his appearance with the Russian Orchestra.

***

Minnie Coons, a young American pianist, returned home last week from Germany, where she has been studying under the guidance of Xaver Scharwenka for several years. Under the conductorship of her master Miss Coons made a début in Berlin two years ago with the Leipsic Philharmonic Orchestra. She will be heard here for the first time in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 2, when she will have the assistance of Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony Orchestra.

***

The first concert of the season will be the reappearance of Gwilym Miles, the Welsh baritone, in Mendelssohn Hall on Tuesday evening, Oct. 31, in a recital. Mr. Miles spent the last eighteen months in Europe.

***

Herbert Witherspoon's song recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Thursday afternoon, Nov. 16, will be the first of a series that he is to give in this country during the Winter.

***

The Boston Symphony Orchestra began its series of home concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, and has in prospect one of the most successful seasons in its history. The auction sales of seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals and Saturday evening concerts showed a substantial increase in the prices brought over those of last year. Besides the fact that the prospects in the other cities where the orchestra gives series of concerts is unusually good, the week's trip into Canada and the Middle West turned out to be profitable, large audiences being the rule everywhere. The first concerts in New York will be on Thursday evening, Nov. 9, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 11.

***

The Dannreuther String Quartet, Gustav Dannreuther, F. Lorenz Smith, Josef Kovarik, and Emil Schenck, are this year celebrating their twentieth anniversary. To commemorate it they will give a special concert on Nov. 15 in Carnegie Chamber Music Hall, with the assistance of George Falkenstein, pianist. The programme will include Schumann's piano quartet, Op. 44; theme and variations from Schubert's D minor quartet, Brahms's string quartet, Op. 67, and F. Lorenz Smith's quintet for piano and string, two movements. The Dannreuther Quartet is the oldest organization of its kind in this city, and has a record of producing many new works for the first time in this city. Many prominent artists have assisted them.

PULITZER-WEBB WEDDING.

Ceremony at Country Church—600 Guests at Reception.

Special to The New York Times.

SHELBURNE, Vt., Oct. 14.—Frederica Vanderbilt Webb, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb, and Ralph Pulitzer of New York were married here to-day by the Right Rev. Arthur C. A. Hall, Episcopal Bishop of Vermont, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Ernest H. Stires of St. Thomas's Church, New York, and the Rev. William F. Weeks, rector of Trinity Church, Shelburne.

The ceremony was at noon in the little Trinity Episcopal Church in Shelburne, seven miles away. Only 157 guests could be seated in the church.

The bride, escorted by her father and preceded by her bridesmaids and ushers, was met at the chancel rail by the bridegroom, accompanied by his brother. The marriage service of the Episcopal Church was read by Bishop Hall.

The bride wore white satin with old point lace, and the lace veil worn by her mother at her marriage. Among her ornaments was a necklace and pendant of diamonds and emeralds the gift of the bridegroom. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley and white orchids.

The bride's attendants were Miss Wenonah Wetmore of New York and Miss Edith Pulitzer as maids of honor. The best man was Joseph Pulitzer, Jr. The ushers were Phoenix Ingraham of New York, Charles Draper, Otway Byrd, J. Watson, Webb, brother of the bride; Nicholas Biddle, Duncan Harris, Thomas Crimmins, and Aaron Davis.

The wedding breakfast and reception were held at Shelburne Farms, 600 guests attending. About 2 o'clock this afternoon the bridal pair boarded Dr. Webb's yacht Elfrida and sailed across Lake Champlain.

The bride's presents included a house on Fifth Avenue, New York, from the bridegroom's father. Many gifts in solid gold and silver were displayed in the billiard room at Shelburne Farms. One of the most superb pieces was from Frederick Vanderbilt, uncle of the bride.

BLIND BOYS PLAY FOOTBALL.

Sightless Students of Kentucky Institute in a Rough Match Game.

Special to The New York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 14.—The sightless football eleven representing the Kentucky School for the Education of the Blind played their first match game of the season here to-day, meeting the Crescent Hill eleven, composed of Normal School boys on otherwise equal terms, in a hotly fought and rough contest, under slightly modified rules, that the blind players might not be too much handicapped. That the blind players were beaten was to be expected, but playing in the dark, as the sightless students did, they amazed their opponents and the spectators by their aggressive team work and the precision with which they carried out the plays called for through a secret signal code. The blind students were well satisfied with the showing they made in their first match outside the institute grounds, and displayed so much enthusiasm that football is established as a popular sport with the school.

The game, although ragged, was as rough and as fierce as the usual run of football games. The final score, 25 to 0 in favor of Crescent Hill, does not represent the respective merits of the two teams. Although handicapped by sightless eyes, the boys of the institute eleven attempted and executed with almost the success of their normally sensed opponents mass plays, line bucks, and runs, and even fake plays.

It was a remarkable sight to see how the blind boys went into the game. They played so well, and in such orderly style, that several chance spectators could scarcely be induced to believe that the players in the green jerseys were blind.

The rules of the game, modified for the occasion, permitted the use of the association sphere ball instead of the Rugby oval. This change was made because the blind boys have to be guided almost entirely by the sense of hearing, and would be at a more serious disadvantage if the oval, which bounds about erratically, were used.

The goal-kicking feature of the regular game was abandoned, and the quarter back of the opposing team was required to call "Pass" when he made the signal for the ball to be put in motion. This was done so as to give the blind boys the signal to charge. In other respects the game was not different from that played by the college elevens.

NEW HIPPODROME FEATURES.

They Include Woman Lion Tamer, Trained Ponies, and a Bulldog.

Miss Marquis's cake walking, boxing, and dancing ponies, not to mention a bulldog hanging to a strap; Claire Heliot and her fourteen trained lions, and a new riding act by Robert Cottrell and Louise Powell, were the new offerings of Thompson & Dundy at the Hippodrome last night. The lion act, which has never before been seen on this side of the Atlantic, was the first of the new features to be put on.

Miss Heliot performs in evening dress in a great circular cage. She compels the lions to hurdle around the ring, to form themselves in all kinds of figures and combinations, and finally, as a climax, brings the act to an end by picking up in her arms August, said by the press agent to weigh 380 pounds. Then, with the lion on her shoulders, she walks off the stage.

Miss Marquis has all her ponies trained to cake walk on two legs only, while one little hay animal can do in addition a boxing act. The bulldog's part is to hang on to the straps that are attached to various parts of the ponies' trappings.

Every seat in the Hippodrome was occupied last night, and the new importations evidently made a hit.

SHAKESPEARE FOR EAST SIDE.

Ben Greet Players to Appear at the Educational Alliance.

Shakespearean performances are to be given next month in the Educational Alliance, at Jefferson Street and East Broadway, by the Ben Greet players, under the personal direction of Mr. Greet.

The plays will include "Henry V.," on the night of Nov. 4; "Twelfth Night," on Nov. 11; "The Merchant of Venice," on Nov. 18, and "Julius Caesar," on Nov. 25. Heretofore Shakespeare has been played on the lower east side by Yiddish actors only.

HENRY WOODRUFF STARS.

"The Genius and the Model" Produced at Rochester.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, Oct. 14.—"The Genius and the Model," a comedy by William C. De Mille and Cecil B. De Mille, was produced at the Lyceum Theatre to-day with Henry Woodruff and Miss Edna Goodrich in the principal rôles.

The play deals with artist life in New York, the hero being a wealthy young man who gets artists to let him display their works as his. He is suddenly hailed as a great genius and so finds he can win the hand of the girl on whom he wished to make the impression. He falls in love with a model, however, and has a hard time proving he is not a genius.

"Lightning Conductor" on the Stage.

"The Lightning Conductor," a story by C. M. and A. M. Williamson, has been made into a three-act comedy by Harry B. Smith, and will be produced in the week of Nov. 27. Contracts were signed yesterday with J. Fred and Charles Zimmerman and Harry G. Sommers, with Herbert Kelcey and Miss Effie Shannon to appear in the principal rôles.

By Boat and Trolley to Boston.

The New Line has installed a trolley system in connection with its Sound steamboat service between Fall River and Boston. The run of fifty-three miles by trolley occupies three hours and twenty-seven minutes. The route is by way of Taunton, Brockton, Blue Hills, and the Boston Park system to Post Office Square, Boston. Limited excursion tickets [illegible] sold from this city to Boston.

CALVE SANG AND DANCED WHILE LA SAVOIE TOSSED

And the Seasick on the Saloon Floor Had to Laugh.

SEASICK—ME? SAYS THE DIVA

Not Much—Tale of a Stormy Trip That Brought in the French Liner a Day Late.

The French liner La Savoie arrived at her pier, 42 North River, at 6:30 o'clock last evening after a delay of twenty-four hours caused by Wednesday night's hurricane.

The passengers of all classes were kept in the cabins with the hatches battened down. Only the crew were allowed on deck from Wednesday morning until Friday.

When the hurricane was at its height on Wednesday night the saloon passengers were cheered by Mme. Calvé, who told them there was no danger, and that they should not be frightened by the howling wind outside. To show how light hearted she was she sang selections from "Carmen" and danced among them as they sat on the carpeted floor of the saloon. The ship was lurching too violently to let anybody sit on chairs.

The passengers forgot their fright as they watched Mme. Calvé dance and heard her sing one song after another with as much self-possession as if she had been on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House.

When the prima donna landed last night she looked the picture of health. She laughed when she was asked if she had been seasick.

"What nonsense," she said. "I have never been in better health and my voice is in excellent condition.

"We had a terrible storm coming over, and many of the ladies looked so ill and frightened on Wednesday night that I thought I would sing from 'Carmen' and try to make them feel gayer.

"I seasick? Oh, no. It was great fun when I tried to dance, and the people, who were sitting on the floor, laughed at my efforts to keep my feet, as the ship rolled and rolled so [showing how it did] with the violence of the seas.

"I am going on a concert tour through Canada and the United States. I appear first in Toronto on Oct. 30. I sing next at Montreal on Nov. 1, and appear in New York at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 4. Then I go to Boston and the West.

"I shall sing French, Spanish, Italian, Irish, Scotch, English, and American songs, but I am not yet sure whether I shall sing in English in New York, as the audiences are so critical."

When it was suggested that no one had satisfactorily taken her place in "Carmen" here, Mme. Calvé laughed and said: "There are plenty of singers to be had, and if they want to sing Carmen they should go and live in Spain for a while, as I did. No woman can sing Carmen who has not lived in Spain. After the concert tour is finished, I may sing in 'Carmen' in New York for two performances before I sail for Europe."

Mme. Calvé brought her own accompanist, M. Camille Decreus, with her. S. Kronberg, her concert manager, said that he had booked Mme. Calvé for forty-six concerts instead of forty, and 80 per cent. of the seats were already sold.

The prima donna drove from the pier to the Hotel Astor, where a suite of rooms had been reserved for her.

The Savoie brought 1,141 passengers. Capt. Poirot said that the hurricane on Wednesday night was one of the worst he had ever encountered. The wind shifted constantly, and blew from all points of the compass.

When the storm was at its worst the Savoie was slowed down.

"I have only once before," said the Captain, "seen the glass as low as it was on Wednesday night. One sailor was knocked down and had his leg broken, but that was our only casualty. We should have arrived here Friday night."

M. C. Blondel, the French Minister to Mexico, was among the cabin passengers on the Savoie.

A SAILOR'S FIRST AUTO RIDE.

The Owner Wanted to be Hospitable After Knocking Him Down.

James Duffy, who said he was a sailor on the Government tug Lancaster, lying at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, took his first ride in an automobile yesterday. Duffy, who was on shore leave, visited relatives in Jersey City and was on his way to Brooklyn, when the automobile, which was driven by Wallace G. Rouse of 109 Storm Avenue, knocked him down. Duffy's head came in contact with the curb. He received a scalp wound, and was removed to the City Hospital. Rouse was taken to the City Hall Police Station.

After Duffy's wound had been dressed he was taken there also, but he refused to make a complaint.

"I got in the way of the lugger," said he, "and it was as much my fault as the lugger's or her pilot. Besides, it was only a little wound, and the doctor's fixed me up all right. I've no fault to find and I want to get back to my ship before my leave expires."

Rouse was discharged, and, by way of showing his gratitude, he invited Duffy to board the automobile and ride to Brooklyn.

"That'll be great," said Duffy, as he climbed into the machine. "Won't the Lancaster's crew be surprised when they see me come sailing alongside in a craft like this."

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The centre of the Western disturbance has moved since Friday night from Western Kansas to Central Iowa with somewhat increased pressure, but with more definite storm formation and a considerable extension of the rain area to the northward and eastward.

Elsewhere the weather has been fair. Temperatures have fallen decidedly in Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, and South Dakota, and have risen from the Mississippi Valley eastward, being now a few degrees above the seasonal average.

Winds along the New England Coast will be light to fresh and mostly south; on the Middle Atlantic Coast light to fresh south; on the South Atlantic and East Gulf Coast light to fresh east to southeast; on the West Gulf Coast light to fresh south, shifting to west and northwest; on the lower lakes fresh south, probably becoming brisk on Erie and shifting to north; Lakes Michigan and Superior brisk to high and shifting, becoming northwest to north; Lake Huron fresh to brisk south, shifting to northwest Sunday night.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND MONDAY.

Eastern New York—Partly cloudy Sunday, probably showers at night or Monday in west portion; cooler Monday, fresh south winds, becoming variable.

New Jersey, Delaware, and Eastern Pennsylvania—Partly cloudy Sunday and Monday, light to fresh south winds.

New England—Fair Sunday, warmer in northwest portion Monday, partly cloudy, probably showers in west portion, light to fresh south winds.

Western New York—Partly cloudy Sunday, rain in afternoon or night; Monday rain and colder, fresh south to west winds.

Western Pennsylvania—Partly cloudy Sunday, rain in afternoon or night in north portion; Monday partly cloudy and colder, fresh south winds shifting to west and northwest.

3 A. M.	46	50	4 P. M.	50	70
6 A. M.	45	49	6 P. M.	53	69
9 A. M.	48	54	9 P. M.	51	64
12 M.	57	65	12 P. M.	49	62

The thermometer of the Weather Bureau is 285 feet above the street level.

The average temperature yesterday was 60; corresponding date 1904, 50; corresponding date for the last twenty-five years, 55.

The thermometer registered 51 degrees at 8 A. M. and 66 degrees at 8 P. M. yesterday, the maximum temperature being 70 degrees at 3 P. M. and the minimum 49 degrees at 6 A. M. The humidity was 79 per cent. at 8 A. M. and [illegible] per cent. at 8 P. M.

MULCAHY HAS A VISION.

It Appeared to Him That There Were 5,000 "Hippydrums" Loose.

Sergt. Bingham of the East Fifty-first Street Station was ruminating at his desk yesterday afternoon, when he received a box call from Forty-third Street and Sixth Avenue.

"This is Mulcahy!" gasped a voice. "The blessed Hippydrum's bruk loose an' is runnin' wild toward Fifth Av'noo. Sind the reserves, for there's five thousand of them."

"Take time, man," said Sergt. Bingham. "Do I understand that 5,000 Hippodromes have broken loose and are running wild?"

After a little elucidation it was learned that seven elephants, more or less, had got away from the Hippodrome, and that a crowd of 5,000 was in pursuit.

"And there's a man chasin' thim wid a boat hook," added Mulcahy.

"Quick!" shouted Bingham to the reserves. "Get over to the Hippodrome, and be sure to arrest that man for threatening citizens with a boathook."

At the Hippodrome the reserves found that Trilby and The Laird, a pair of elephants, had taken advantage of an open door during a rehearsal of "The Hindoo Princess." When the police arrived Trainer "Pete" Barlow was leading the elephants back to the big theatre. He had one by the trunk and the other on the end of "the boathook." There were seven or eight hundred persons following.

"You always get excited," growled Sergt. Bingham to Policeman Mulcahy later. "When you said 5,000 Hippodromes were loose you gave me a shock. What kind of a beast is a hippodrome, anyway?"

He was absolved and so was the press agent.

A DAY'S WEDDINGS.

WHITMAN—HARVEY.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 14.—Miss Jane Whitthorne Harvey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Harvey of this city, was married to Eben Esmond Whitman of New York this morning at St. Timothy's Protestant Episcopal Church, Catonsville, by the Rev. Percy F. Hall, rector.

The bride was given away by her father. Miss Ellen Delano of New York was maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Miss Laura Delano of New York, Miss Palfrey of Boston, Miss Cecil of Danville, Ky., and the Misses Eleanor Jenkins, Elsie Hillen Jenkins, Mirian Ranson, Emma Jackson, and Elizabeth Webb of Baltimore. Malcolm D. Whitman of New York, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. The ushers were Harold C. Whitman and Newell W. Tilton of New York, Hendricks H. Whitman of Brookline, Mass.; Robert Lane of Weston, Mass.; W. Gordon Means of Swampscott, Mass., and Matthew Bolles, Thomas P. Boutelle, and Frank G. Macomber, Jr., of Boston. The ceremony was followed by a breakfast at Chesmont, the country residence of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey.

L'HOMMEDIEU—COLQUITT.

Miss Noelia Virginia Colquitt and Frank Arnold L'Hommedieu, son of Sylvester Y. L'Hommedieu of South Orange, were married yesterday afternoon at Rexleigh, the residence of the bride's aunt, Miss Elizabeth L. Woodhouse. The ceremony was performed by Archdeacon Lewis Cameron, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, South Orange.

The bride wore a gown of point appliqué. Her veil was fastened with orange blossoms, and she carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley.

The maid of honor, the bride's only attendant, was her sister, Miss Anna W. Colquitt, whose gown was of white chiffon cloth and Irish lace. She carried Bride roses. Sylvester Y. L'Hommedieu, Jr., brother of the bridegroom, acted as best man, and the bride was given away by her brother, Louis W. Colquitt. The ushers were John Gardiner Gould and William M. Shackford.

As Miss Colquitt's family is in mourning, the invitations to the ceremony were limited, and there was no reception following.

HOGUET—HOWARD.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW CANAAN, Conn., Oct. 14.—Miss Ruth Howard, younger daughter of Edward Trasker Howard of 143 Willow Street, Brooklyn, was married to-day to Henri Anthony Louis Hoguet of Manhattan. The ceremony took place at 12 o'clock in a bower of dahlias and chrysanthemums on the lawn of St. Aloysius Catholic Church. The Rev. James F. Goggin of Holy Trinity Catholic Church of New York performed the ceremony. The Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis of Brooklyn, formerly Miss Howard's pastor, was present.

The bride's attendant was her four-year-old niece, Miss Dorothy Deeming. The ushers were Alfred Booream of Brooklyn, Robert Louis Hoguet and Paul Louis Phelan, cousins of the bridegroom; William Churchill Garrish, and Leclanche Moon of Manhattan, and Dr. John Devereaux of Utica. The best man was Mortimer Percy Arnold of Manhattan.

ADENAW—GILLETT.

Miss Charlotte Gillett, daughter of Mrs. Elmslie Gillett, was married yesterday afternoon at the residence of the bride's mother, 137 East Forty-fourth Street, to Arthur P. F. Adenaw, son of Mr. and Mrs. Julius K. Adenaw of East Sixty-fourth Street.

Miss Mildred Gillett was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Amy Hauxhurst Mills, the daughter of Mrs. Abraham Mills; Miss Gladys Goodrich, daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Caspar F. Goodrich of Pomfret, Conn.; Miss Georgianna M. Parks, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Lewis M. Parks; Miss Agnes W. Russell, and Miss Alice Grant Smith. Herman Coster was best man. A small reception followed the ceremony.

MARTENS—WILSON.

Miss Florence Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George B. Wilson, was married yesterday afternoon to Frederick A. Martens, at the Church of the Heavenly Rest. The church was profusely decorated with orchids and palms.

Mrs. Bartol Hall was matron of honor and Jay F. Carlisle was best man. The ushers were Lemuel C. Benedict, Hugh Hill, Graham F. Blandy, and G. Searing Wilson.

A small reception followed the ceremony at Sherry's. The Rev. Dr. Parker Morgan officiated at the church. He was assisted by the Rev. Dr. Husk of Great Neck, L. I.

ROGERS—TALCOTT.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRITAIN, Conn., Oct. 14.—Florence Hazen Talcott, daughter of ex-Mayor and Mrs. John B. Talcott, and John Leete Rogers of New York, were married at the home of the bride's parents to-day. The Rev. Dr. O. Z. Davis officiated.

Miss Helen Hooker Talcott, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and Miss Edith C. Talcott of New York and Miss [illegible]ida Peck of Bristol, cousins of the bride, were bridesmaids. Dr. David Camp Rogers of Harvard, brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

SUESINE SILK
WEARS BETTER THAN SILK

THERE are two differences between China Silk and Suesine Silk—price and wear. Suesine Silk costs half as much as China Silk and wears better because of the touch of cotton. As far as finish and beauty go you cannot tell one from the other. Think of having material for two dresses or waists of Suesine Silk at the cost of one of China Silk. If your dealer should be out of Suesine Silk, write to us for samples, and give us his name.

WILBUR F. STUDEBAKER DEAD.

Member of the Carriage Firm a Victim of Bright's Disease.

Wilbur F. Studebaker, oldest of the second generation of Studebakers who founded the well-known carriage manufacturing firm, died yesterday morning of Bright's disease in his apartments in the Ansonia Hotel. His father, Peter E. Studebaker, who was one of the founders of the firm, died in 1897.

Mr. Studebaker had been a sufferer from Bright's disease for several years, but only for a few days preceding his death had he been confined to his bed. He was born in Indiana in May, 1856, and was educated at the Chester Military Academy, Chester, Penn.

When twenty years old he began to learn the business of the Studebaker Brothers' Company, and a few years later became manager of the Chicago branch. He remained there until 1896, when he retired from active business and removed to New York City, where he lived until his death.

In 1876 Mr. Studebaker married Miss Fannie Doulin of St. Joseph, Mo. Two children were born to them, a son and a daughter. The son died just before Mr. Studebaker removed to New York. The daughter, Mrs. Robert Stewart, survives. She is a resident of Philadelphia. The first Mrs. Studebaker died in 1900, and in 1902 Mr. Studebaker married Miss Laura Morris of Chicago, who survives him.

Mr. Studebaker leaves two sisters, Mrs. N. J. Riley of South Bend, Ind., and Mrs. William R. Innis of New York. Mr. Innis is the general manager of the business in New York.

THE PAINE MONUMENT AT LAST FINDS A HOME

TOWN REFUSES TO DECORATE

But Turns Out for the Exercises—Part of the Patriot's Brain to Rest Under the Shaft.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Oct. 14.—The monument to Thomas Paine, which has been so long without a home, was formally installed in North Street to-day and the City of New Rochelle took it into its keeping.

It was a great occasion here. There was a parade, including two companies of the Twenty-third United States Infantry, representatives of the First Battalion of Minutemen, the Washington Continental Guards, and Grand Army posts and 300 school children. There was a salute of thirteen guns—one for every one of the original States—by the Second Battery, N. G. N. Y., in Paine's memory. And finally, at this Tom Paine memorial gathering, a minister pronounced the benediction.

The benediction was pronounced by the Rev. De Witt L. Pelton, rector of St. James's Protestant Episcopal Church, New York, who is Chaplain of the General Minutemen of the United States Army. He made no direct reference to Paine, but besought the peace of the nations and God's grace on the assembled company.

Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., who was Chairman of the ceremony, held in his hand a little green box, which is to be buried under the monument. In it there was a piece of gray material, resembling hard putty. According to the Chairman, it is all that remains of Thomas Paine, an authentic part of his brain. The body was originally buried about twenty yards south of where the monument stands to-day, and was removed to England by Cobbett in 1819 in the hope that it might be the means of stirring up a revolution in England for a democratic government. The bit of the patriot's brain was purchased in London a few years ago by Moncure D. Conway.

Mr. Conway kept the matter a secret until he learned of the action of New Rochelle in appropriating the money to inclose and preserve the plot in North Street, where Paine's body was hurled and where his monument now stands. He then wrote to the committee in charge of the celebration, and it has been decided that as soon as the remains of the man who gave the world "The Age of Reason" and plead with the Paris Commune to kill monarchy, but spare the King, can be encased in a copper box they will be buried under the monument.

On the inner cover of the box is the printed statement that the brain was obtained by B. Tilley, the tailor admirer of Paine, on Tuesday, Jan. 7, 1833, when he visited Coppett at 1,011 Bolt Court, Fleet Street, London. At the same time he took away some of Paine's hair, which has not been accounted for.

It had been the wish of the Mayor and Aldermen of New Rochelle that the citizens decorate their houses in honor of the rededication of the monument to the free thinker. Here and there was a flag, but there were not very many, for New Rochelle is a city of churchgoers. The residents, however, let their children miss a day from school to attend the ceremonies. The committee in charge of the exercises saw to it that there were three American flags stretched from the trees back of the monument and that the iron railing was covered with red, white, and blue bunting.

After the procession, including the two companies of United States soldiers, the National Guard artillery of two pieces, members of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the Minute Men dressed in Continental uniforms, reached the monument, at the base of which was a wreath placed there by Mrs. Adeline Le Fort of New York, the ceremonies began with the singing of "America" by the school children. The accompaniment was played by the Fort Slocum band. Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., told the history of the monument.

"The remains of Paul Jones have been brought home with proper honor and ceremony," he said, "and it is to the honor of New Rochelle that such as can be found of the body of our hero should be reinterred at this spot on a grant of land which was originally confiscated from a Tory and awarded to him."

Theodore Schroder of the Brooklyn Philosophical Association followed with an address on "Paine, the Author Hero of the American Revolution."

"We are honored in that we can understand his understanding and are encouraged by our beliefs that were his," he said. "His mind was not dulled by a college education. He knew because he helped in doing things and not because he had read what others had learned in doing things. He had the good fortune to be born poor. He was the first to protest against slavery and insist upon arbitration as the means of avoiding war.

"Three times when the Continental Army was on the point of collapse he saved it. Before the Battle of Trenton his pen encouraged the Revolutionary troops and made victory possible. The success of the War of Independence was as much due to his pen as to the Generalship of George Washington. As he said, the world was his country, and after the success of our arms he went to countries where liberty was not.

"His greatest act was when a member of the French Assembly, with France in the hands of the mob, he voted against the killing of the King, asking for his banishment. He knew what peril he was in, but his great soul feared not to do right."

Edward Hagaman Hall, Vice President of the Sons of the American Revolution, who appeared with others in Continental uniform, said that he did so for the reason that the people should be more familiar with the appearance of those who won their independence. He acknowledged that their uniforms could not have been so new and gorgeous in the days that "tried men's souls."

The children and the Fort Slocum band then rendered "Columbia." The little ones seemed frightened, and a member of the Arrangement Committee said that somebody must have been telling them dreadful tales of "Tom" Paine. The band was confused and had a hard struggle keeping in time with the children.

The subject of Prof. Thaddeus B. Wakeman's address was "Why Patriots Honor Paine." He addressed most of his remarks to the children and had them recount on their fingers as he repeated them these five things that they should remember:

"First—Thomas Paine suggested and mostly achieved American independence.

"Second—He suggested and largely contributed to the establishment of this democratic Republic.

"Third—The Federal Union of States is his accomplishment.

"Fourth—He was the first to point to the reality of human brotherhood, the true religion of humanity. That is being largely accomplished and is being striven for by the greatest statesmen in the world, headed, thank God, by the American President.

"Fifth—Still to be accomplished is the republic of all nations and men, aiding and not fighting one another."

Mayor Henry S. Clark accepted the monument on behalf of the city from the Paine Historical Society, the Paine Memorial Association, and the Bronx Bust Committee, represented by Dr. Foote. The children were singing the "Star-Spangled Banner" when the guns in the nearby fields thundered thirteen times, drowning their voices, but not the Slocum Band, which knew well how to play the National Anthem. The vesper bells were ringing when the last gun of the salute to the memory of "Tom" Paine was fired.

Advertising Men to Meet.

The International Advertising Association will hold its second annual convention at the Waldorf-Astoria on Oct. 17 and 18. On the second day, the first annual banquet will be held. "Advertising," the sole toast, will be responded to by Charles Emory Smith, J. Hamilton Lewis, James M. Beck, and others.

TWO-SHARE MAN WINS.

Court Says He Has a Right to See Amalgamated Copper Books.

Joseph Fennelly got a writ of mandamus yesterday from Justice Dowling, in the Supreme Court, directing the Amalgamated Copper Company, a New Jersey corporation, to permit him to inspect its books. Fennelly wished to obtain a list of the stockholders, for what reason the papers filed in court did not show. He holds only two shares in the company.

"When a foreign corporation," Justice Dowling said, "seeks to do business in this State, it must comply with the requirements for such privilege which the wisdom of the Legislature of this State may create, and it cannot do business in this State and accept a privilege so granted while repudiating performance of the conditions upon which it maintains its business here."

The company opposed Fennelly's application on the ground that his proceeding was irregular.

FIGHT OVER McKINLEY MONEY.

Exceptions Filed to the Accounts of Abner McKinley's Widow.

SOMERSET, Penn., Oct. 14.—A. F. Kennedy of New York City filed exceptions to-day to the account of Mrs. Annie E. McKinley, executrix of the estate of the late President's brother.

Mr. Kennedy alleges that about $80,000 represented by life insurance policies on the life of Abner McKinley has not been accounted for, and that Abner's share of the estate of his brother, amounting to $50,000 or $80,000, has not been divided among the creditors.

FILIPINOS' WAR STORY SOON TO BE PUBLISHED

The Insurgents' Side Compiled from Captured Papers.

REPORTS MADE BY THE TON

Records in Transport Seized by the Army on Every Occasion—Capt. Taylor Translates Them.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The work of translating and compiling the great mass of records and papers taken from the Filipino insurgents is nearly completed. Within a short time the report of Capt. John R. M. Taylor, Fourteenth Infantry, who has had charge of the tedious task, will be ready for the printers.

The report and accompanying exhibits will make several volumes, and will furnish the extraordinary spectacle of a Government setting forth the case and cause of its adversary in war. The report will be essentially the story of the Filipinos, taken from their own evidence.

It will deal with their relations with the Spaniards during the years before any American ever dreamed of going to the Philippines; will cover their doings in Hongkong prior to Aguinaldo's return to Cavite, and the complicated triangular situation about Manila in the Summer of 1898, as well as with the development of government sometimes called republican and sometimes revolutionary, and its struggle with the American troops.

A vast amount of material has been examined in preparing the work. The Filipinos were voluminous makers of reports and whenever and wherever they fled they tried to take along a part, at least, of their papers. These were captured in trunks, bags, boxes, and bull carts. Some of them were picked up in the most casual manner.

One of the most important fell out of a bundle with which a man was starting to light a fire, and was rescued by an officer who could read Spanish. In nearly every town the Americans occupied a mass of insurgent documents was found.

Often much of the stuff was destroyed or scattered without examination, and no doubt some interesting and perhaps valuable papers were thus lost. But the habit of making a record of everything was so strong with the Filipinos that they usually overlapped, and it is certain there are no important gaps in their story.

On the other hand, the translators and compilers have been obliged to wade through a tremendous amount of useless rubbish to get at the occasional bits of value. The work will give an interesting account, out of their own mouths, of what the Filipinos thought and felt and aspired to, as well as of some of the queer things they did, in the strenuous years of 1898 and 1899.

END OF THE OREGON FAIR.

Stockholders Will Receive a Dividend of Over 30 Per Cent.

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 14.—"Officers and stockholders' day" at the Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition ends the fair. After to-morrow the work of wrecking the immense exhibit palaces and State buildings will begin.

President Goode has made public the announcement that stockholders will receive a dividend of from 30 to 40 per cent. on their stock, a record said to excel any exposition of like character ever held in the world.

The fair attracted to this city and to the great Northwest hundreds of thousands of people, among them investors in almost every line of endeavor, and made known to the entire country some of the advantages which the Pacific Coast has to offer homeseekers.

Navy League to Entertain Sailors.

The members of the Navy League of the United States are raising a fund to entertain the bluejackets of the English and American fleets during their stay in these waters. All the previous arrangements for the entertainment of the crews have been made by our own sailors in return for the generous hospitality extended to our ships by the English people.

TO ATLANTIC CITY BY BOAT.

A Recent Invention Makes the Seaside City's Dream a Reality.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Oct. 14.—Atlantic City and New York are to be connected by a line of steamboats. The company which will back the line is composed of local capitalists in the main, although New York and Philadelphia capital is interested.

Commodore Louis Kuehnle is at the head of the enterprise, and associated with him are local bankers and hotel men.

The railroads are now carrying annually to this resort about 5,000,000 passengers, at a round trip fare of $5. Steamboat men feel confident that more than enough travelers would prefer a water to a rail trip to the shore to make the scheme profitable. The boats will have a capacity of 3,700 passengers. Two steamers will be put in service at first, one leaving New York nightly at the close of the theatres and arriving here early in the morning, and the other leaving Atlantic City in the morning.

The discovery that makes the water connection possible was made some years ago by C. M. Coen when he was interested in steamboat navigation on the Mississippi River, where light draught boats are a necessity. He worked out his idea and put it in operation on boats in the West. To propel the ordinary steamer through the water by means of a screw demands that the latter be sunk deep in the water to secure the necessary resistance. The depth, or resistance, is secured by the Coen system by placing the screw in a half cylinder in the bottom of the boat and maintaining a column of water above the wheel by means of a vacuum pump.

Commodore Kuehnle heard of the Coen system early last Spring and induced the inventor to come to Atlantic City and demonstrate his principle. A special boat was built for the purpose. The trial trips were made at night and the scheme has been kept a secret. The boat was run through shallow water in the bays back of the city and the trials were eminently satisfactory.

The boats for the New York service will be 750 feet long and about twice the beam of the ordinary steamer. They will be fitted up luxuriously and will, under the Government regulations, accommodate about 3,700 passengers.

These enormous boats will draw but six feet of water, although there will be a pressure of 26 to 28 feet over the twin screws.

This will enable them to cross the bar at low tide at a time when even many small yachts are excluded. The boats will attain a much higher speed than the ordinary steamers owing to their light draught. They will be equipped with immense refrigerating plants for the conveyance of meats and vegetables from New York for the local hotels.

ENGLISH AND OTHERS ARE HELD FOR TRIAL

A CORRECTION BY ASHBRIDGE

Ex-Mayor Explains Contract with Architect—Final Payment Made with a Building Unfinished.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 14.—Abraham L. English, Director of Public Safety during the administration of Mayor Samuel H. Ashbridge; Philip H. Johnson, architect; John W. Henderson and Henry E. Baton, members of the contracting firm of Henderson & Co., and James D. Finley, a former Building Inspector, were held in $5,000 bail each to-day on charges of conspiracy to defraud the city.

The testimony presented yesterday tended to show that in the construction of the new smallpox hospital inferior materials had been improperly used; that Inspector Finley had reported favorably upon the work, and that the original specifications had been fraudulently changed.

Ex-Mayor Ashbridge asked permission to-day to correct a portion of his testimony, and, although counsel for the prosecution objected, he was permitted to do so. Mr. Ashbridge said that the contract by which Philip H. Johnson became a city architect was made three months after Johnson had been specially engaged to draw the plans for the smallpox hospital, and that building was not mentioned in the contract.

"Mr. Johnson never drew any plans for our administration under his contract," said Mr. Ashbridge.

George W. Sunderland, Assistant Director of the Department of Public Health and Charities, testified that he authorized the final payment to Henderson & Co., although he knew the building was not completed. Asked why he did this, the witness said it was the understanding in the department that the appropriation was not sufficient to complete the building.

He said, also, that he was not aware that the specifications called for a completed building. He authorized the final payment on the certificate of Architect Johnson.

Other witnesses were called to show that inferior material had been substituted for that called for in the specifications.

Counsel for the defendants admitted that the testimony would send the case to court and agreed to re-enter bail.

MATHEWS WAS HONEST, RIVERSIDE CLUB CRIES

A Vehement Meeting of Protest Against His Prosecution.

PERSECUTION, ONE CALLS IT

Jerome Bitterly Denounced as "Hounding" the Dead Republican Secretary —Gruber, Olcott and Slater Talk.

District Attorney William Travers Jerome was roundly abused last night by the friends of Armitage Mathews, who gathered at the Riverside Republican Club, of which Mathews was President, to honor the memory of the dead man. "Hounding" was only one of the terms applied to the District Attorney's prosecution of the Secretary of the Republican County Committee. Ex-District Attorney William M. K. Olcott said, with much vehemence that Mr. Jerome had acted not as a Public Prosecutor, but as a private persecutor.

The memorial service was no cut-and-dried, perfunctory affair. Most of those present—and the clubrooms were packed to suffocation—were personal friends of Mathews. Two or three of the speakers, among them ex-Senator Slater, wept openly as they paid tributes to their dead comrade.

All of them pronounced him an ideal citizen, a fearless, faithful and honest man.

Col. Abraham Gruber, who has made many attacks upon District Attorney Jerome, was the first speaker; but he, strange to say, said not a word of "hounding" or "persecution," blaming Mr. Jerome only by inference. Then came Congressment William S. Bennet, of the Seventeenth District.

Mr. Bennet said that Mr. Jerome had once been the friend of the man he was trying to send to jail, and that his turning into an enemy had been the unkindest cut of all to Mathews.

"I recall," said Mr. Bennet, "that in 1901, when this man [Mr. Jerome] was running for office, he came to Mathews and said to him:

"'You know how to get the votes of the east side for me; tell me how to go about it.' And Mathews told him. He mapped out the campaign which won those votes. And when this man who had been his friend turned from him and tried to convict him on perjured testimony, Mathews was broken-hearted. He felt that more than anything else.

"As I stand here in hope of future salvation and awaiting the final judgment, I declare that Armitage Mathews died an innocent man."

Of all who spoke, ex-Judge Olcott was the most vehement. He is a member of the law firm of Olcott, Black, Gruber & Bonynge, which was defending Mathews. In expressing his opinion of District Attorney Jerome's course he became so excited that he could not hold his voice down to the moderate pitch which had made the other talks quiet and seemly.

"When I first heard of this charge against Harry—we used to call him Harry," said Mr. Olcott, "I said it was impossible. Afterward, when I examined it as a lawyer, I found that the charges were clearly unprovable. Every word that the prosecution was going to put before the jury we knew to be false. If the man who was conducting the trial had been a public prosecutor and not a private persecutor he would have made a righteous examination of the charges. He would have said, and the Grand Jury would have said, 'It is not possible.'

"They were going to prosecute Mathews with the evidence of men sentenced to Sing Sing for ten and fifteen years—with evidence given on condition that the sentences of these rascals be lessened. It was from such men that evidence was to be obtained.

"What a creed for a District Attorney! If this is the way a prosecution is carried on, who of us is safe? Not Abe Gruber, or myself, or Roosevelt! As fast as the typewriters can rattle off affidavits they will be rattled off under such a temptation as this.

"Of course, nobody quite meant to do this thing—to drive a man to death. But I say that the both-sides-seeing quality was absent in the District Attorney. If it had not been he would have laughed at the charges against Mathews. Armitage Mathews was a martyr, made a martyr by those who would cloak themselves with his honesty.

"Of course, I know and you know that he did not kill himself intentionally. It may have been caused by vertigo, but anyhow it was never done with a sane mind. We know that Harry did not do an uncourageous thing. If we had no other reason to know it—and we have many—this one is sufficient: He would never have gone without a good-bye to Abe Gruber and me and the others whom he knew to be his friends.

"The poor boy, innocent as he was, had the fear that wrong would triumph before the petty jury as it had triumphed before the Grand Jury. That was the only fear he had. It was no fear of a just trial. Too many who don't know him draw false deductions that he killed himself to escape appearing before the jury. From you who knew him the gospel shall go out that Mathews was right, an innocent man, a just man.

"His character was damaged in the eyes of those who did not know him. I tell you, it is an awful thing to have driven a man to death like this. It is an awful thing to have the responsibility that rests on the shoulders of the man downtown. I do not say that his death was caused with a purpose, but it was just as bad as a purpose, for the prosecutor persecuted him by means of perjured testimony.

"I say again, Mathews was innocent, innocent, innocent!"

Charles E. Lansing, a lawyer, of 169 Broadway, and an old friend of Mathews, was another of those who spoke.

"Armitage Mathews," he said, "was as gentle as a child, as loving as a mother. He did not attain perfection—that is not given to any man—but he came very near it."

Ex-State Senator Slater said: "To-night I am in the valley of the shadow of death. Eighteen years ago I met Armitage Mathews and I have known him ever since. Just as I have always been his friend, now that he is dead I will be his friend just the same. I thank God that there was an Armitage Mathews."

Col. Gruber, in his speech, took occasion to give the Citizens' Union a characteristic "roast." In speaking of the run Mathews made for Alderman, he said: "Tammany had its candidate; Mathews was the Republican candidate, and the Citizens' Union had a candidate. The Citizens' Union always goes beyond the bounds of truth and justice in their denunciations, and they are experts in spreading handbills. They spread pamphlets full of abuse of Mathews; but he was elected a first and a second time.

"This town is in mourning to-night for Armitage Mathews, because he was pure-minded, honest, loving, kind. I met him one cold day on an elevated station and he told me of having been up in 101st Street giving to a poor family. Do you wonder that the poor mourn him? He was light-hearted, never 'out of sorts.' His nature was the kind fitted to fight adversity. He was so good, so pure, so honest."

Resolutions of respect were passed after the speakers had finished, and the Secretary of the club asked all the members to gather at 1:30 o'clock to-day for the funeral.

On the bulletin board of the club is an editorial containing an attack on Jerome and calling to mind his supposed hostility to Jews. A reporter representing a paper which had printed an editorial not to the liking of the club was asked at first not to attend the meeting, but afterward was allowed to go in.

REGISTER TO-MORROW!

A WILLIAM M'ADOO ARRESTED.

Bicycle Policeman Was Daunted When Automobilist Gave His Name.

Bicycle Policeman Gibney was cruising along the Boulevard Lafayette last night, when a snorting juggernaut came along at a high speed.

Out came his chronometer and after a hasty calculation he yelled triumphantly: "Stop!"

The automobile whizzed past him. Gibney's legs went like windmills to get the spark in the motor cycle. Then a chase began. It was lively while it lasted, but after seven blocks the auto came to a standstill. In it was a smooth-shaven man with long black hair.

"Well?" said the man, calmly.

"You're under arrest!" gasped Gibney, out of breath. "Come on to the station. What's your name, any way?"

"My name," said the man, coolly, "is William McAdoo."

Gibney looked at the landscape, and in that awful moment wondered what would happen if Japan ever adopted woman suffrage. It would assuredly, he thought, result in trouble in the Balkans. Then he turned his head slowly and looked into the face of the man in the auto. Slowly a grin overspread the policeman's face and his breathing became deep and regular.

"You're a fakir," he said, rolling the words off his tongue with unction. "You think I ain't seen the Commish's phiz in the papers?"

There was an ominous pause.

"Where's your mustache?" thundered Gibney suddenly. "Come on to the station. Impersonatin' an officer—an' the Commish at that."

They traveled a block. Then the man in the automobile said:

"There is some mistake, my friend. The Commissioner is plain William; I am William G."

But he had to go to the station, just the same, where, after depositing $100 bail, William G. McAdoo, who is President of the New York and New Jersey Tunnel Company, pursued his career toward his home in Yonkers.

GUILD AND DRAPER SPLIT.

Massachusetts Republican Candidates at Odds on Tariff.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 14.—At a dinner given to the Republican editors of the Commonwealth by the Republican State Committee, Lieut. Gov. Guild, the candidate for Governor, astonished his hearers by declaring that the issue is between immediate revision of the tariff and reckless tariff smashing, the former the Republican policy, the latter the Democratic.

Mr. Guild was obliged to leave before Eben S. Draper, the candidate for Lieutenant Governor, spoke. Mr. Draper declared that the industries of Massachusetts are in no danger, that labor is employed, and, in short, that there is no need of tinkering with the tariff.

A dispatch from Washington says that the President is in favor of free coal, iron, and hides. Senator Crane, who is close to the President, is known to favor the removal of the duties upon these articles. The statement is also made that Senator Aldrich believes in low duties on steel, iron, coal, and hides, but fears that nothing can be done at the next session.

RAID RESORT IN THEFT CASE.

Mrs. Rice, Two of Her Employes, and a Clerk Locked Up.

"Ole Marm Rice's" place, at 44 West Thirtieth Street, one of the most notorious saloons and music halls in the Tenderloin, was raided yeaterday afternoon by Detectives Hawkins and Owens. This time it was to make arrests for stealing and receiving stolen goods.

The prisoners locked up in the Tenderloin station were Frederick Ramster, a clerk, who said he lived at 38 West Twenty-sixth Street, charged with grand larceny, and Albert Rice, familiarly known as "Marm Rice"; Charles Selicker, her manager, and Edward West, one of her bartenders. They were charged with receiving stolen goods.

The police say that Ramster, while doing some work in the house of Mrs. Emma Anna Gaissert, at 38 West Twenty-sixth Street, two weeks ago, broke open her trunks, and got away with $400 or $500 worth of tapestries, dresses, laces, and bric-a-brac. Ramster confessed, the detectives declare, telling them that he had sold some of the stuff outright to Mrs. Rice and Edward West, and that Selicker had bought his pawn tickets and had redeemed some of the goods. The detectives recovered the stolen property.

DOUBLE FORCES IN A RAID.

Hogan and Bourke's Men Corral 200 in an East 12th Street Room.

Inspector Hogan's detectives and the men of Acting Captain Bourke's station combined in raiding an alleged poolroom in East Twelfth Street, near Broadway, yesterday, where 200 men were found placing bets on the Belmont Park races.

Many of the men sought to escape from the place by darting through windows and going down the fire escapes. All were corralled, however, before they had a chance to get away, and after their names were taken they were set free. The police arrested only three men who were charged with maintaining a poolroom.

The room was on the second floor of a four-story brownstone building. The detectives entered the building from the front and rear and went up stairs. A heavy iron door, reinforced with steel casings and bars, was battered down. Those arrested were Albert Simpson of 110 West Sixteenth Street, George Reilly of 422 West Seventeenth Street, and John Reid of 166 Third Avenue.

Dr. Elizabeth Irwin Dead.

Dr. Elizabeth Irwin, who for several years has been known for her charitable professional work, especially among women and children, will be buried this evening from her late home, 153 East Forty-seventh Street, where she died Thursday after an operation. Dr. Irwin was born in Brooklyn about forty years ago. She was graduated from the Eclectic Medical College, in this city, in 1894. She was for twelve years medical adviser to the Margaret Strahan Home, in West Twenty-seventh Street, and for the last nine years attending physician at the National Florence Crittenton Mission, in Bleecker Street. From 1896 until June, 1904, she was one of the attending physicians at the dispensary of the Judson Memorial, in South Washington Square.

TOGO'S CHIEF SURGEON NIPPON CLUB'S GUEST

Dr. Suzuki Describes Japan's Great Naval Victory.

PICTURES OF WAR INCIDENTS

Mr. Morimura, the Marshall Field of Japan, Talks of His Country's Prosperity.

Several hundred Japanese gathered at the Nippon Club, in West Eighty-fifth Street, last evening, to welcome Dr. Suzuki, Surgeon General of the Japanese Navy, who was attached to Admiral Togo's fleet, and I. Morimura, the Marshall Field of Japan, who laid the foundation of Japanese trade in America more than thirty years ago.

The interest in the reception tendered to these two guests who are touring the United States was heightened by Surgeon General Suzuki's description of the battle of the Sea of Japan. His talk was illustrated with stereopticon views, showing hospital scenes, the manner of handling the wounded, and everything pertaining to the care of the injured after the big battle. Dr. Suzuki wore the full-dress uniform of an officer of the Japanese Navy and the many decorations which he has received from his Government in his twenty-five years of service.

Dr. J. Takamine, President of the Nippon Club, introduced Mr. Morimura, who told the younger Japanese business men of New York something of his early experiences in introducing Japanese goods to America.

Mr. Morimura is called the Marshall Field of Japan. Besides being perhaps the best-known merchant in Japan and the richest, he is Director of the National Bank of Japan, and is identified with most of the banking institutions throughout the empire.

Although nearly seventy years old, Mr. Morimura made a special trip to the United States to learn as far as possible in what manner a greater trade with Japan could be effected.

"I believe the coming year will see an increase in our export trade nearly double that of any previous year," said Mr. Morimura. "Commercially the war has made us favorably known all over the world. I think we shall soon see a commercial boom in our country that will surprise even ourselves. The country has suffered really very little, if any, in a business way on account of the war. No business failures were reported during the war, and few lines of trade felt the effects of it.

"While America has been a good customer for our goods, Japan is placing large orders in the United States for railroad supplies and all kinds of machinery. This is my third visit to America, and I am highly gratified with the great progress in trade relations since my last visit here ten years ago."

Other prominent Japanese who attended the reception last evening was S. Uchida, Consul General; Y. Imanishi, Manager of the Japanese Specie Bank, and M. Otagawa, engineer of the new railroads building in Japan.

Refuses Salary of $30,000 a Year.

KENOSHA, Wis., Oct. 14.—Nathan Allen of this city has declined to undertake the Presidency of the Central Leather Company recently formed in New Jersey to take over the United States Leather Company, but will be a member of the Executive Committee. The salary of the President would have been at least $30,000 a year.

ITALIAN VENDETTA MURDER.

Man Shot Through the Heart as He Walks Along the Street.

While John O'Shaughnessy of 53 Third Street, Long Island City, was walking through Drigga Avenue, Williamsburg, last night he heard a shot and saw a man fall at the corner of North Eighth Street.

At the same time he saw a man dressed in dark clothes running away. Upon investigation O'Shaughnessy found that the man who had fallen was an Italian. He had been shot through the heart and instantly killed.

The body was removed to the Bedford Avenue Police Station. Nothing was found upon it that would furnish a clue to the man's identity. Capt. Pinkerton sent out his detectives to look for suspicious Italians in the neighborhood where the murder took place. An Italian named Tony Trestello, who was found in a stable at 245 North Eighth Street, was arrested on suspicion.

STEEL PLATE PRICE TALK.

Pools to Meet This Week to Confer on Advance.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 14.—Two important meetings of steel interests are being arranged for next week. The plate pool will meet in New York on Tuesday and the merchant steel pool in Pittsburg on Wednesday. Demand for these products has been enormous, and an advance in prices has been expected for several weeks.

Recently, by removing the differential, a uniform price of $32 a ton on platea was made. A straight advance of $2 a ton or more, it is said, is contemplated. The large orders from railroads for steel cars have resulted in the placing of contracts for plates that will keep many of the mills busy into next year.

FAST TROLLEY IN A CRASH.

New Rochelle Express Hits a Mount Vernon Car—Six Hurt.

Six persons were injured yesterday in a rear-end collision between a trolley car of the East Mount Vernon line and one of the new parlor express cars on the New Rochelle line.

The accident occurred at Webster Avenue and 201st Street. The injured were: Charles Ulman, 215 Willis Avenue, cut and bruised about the head and body; H. L. Varian, 2,777 Webster Avenue, hand crushed; George House, motorman, New Rochelle, hands and face cut; Robert Murray, Spuyten Duyvil, hand injured; Elizabeth Palmer, 3,087 Decatur Avenue, sprained wrist; Mrs. William Erb, 339 West Seventieth Street, contusions.

All were treated by a surgeon from Fordham Hospital. The parting of a chain attached to the emergency brake caused the accident, which is the second of the kind that has happened near the same spot in the last two weeks.

Both cars were crowded, and the passengers were thrown headlong amid a shower of broken glass. All the injured persons were in the forward car, with the exception of Motorman House, who was operating the rear car. The accident occurred on a grade, and the express car was running at high speed when it struck the Mount Vernon car.

Blaze in Municipal Court Building.

Thomas F. Ryan, a clerk in the Ninth District Municipal Court, at 121st Street and Sylvan Place, discovered a fire yesterday afternoon under a staircase where painters had left some oil. A bucket brigade kept the flames in check until the firemen arrived. The blaze was soon extinguished.

ST. BELLANE FIRST IN LONG-DISTANCE RACE

Favorite Won the Two Miles and a Quarter Stake in a Gallop.

HYLAS TOOK CHAMPION'CHASE

White Plains Handicap for Tiptoe—Belmont Park Meeting Ends with an Attendance of 30,000.

Time records stood safe at the Belmont Park track yesterday, but the old record for attendance was lost to sight in the immense patronage for the last day of the Westchester Racing Association's first Autumn meeting. A crowd, estimated at 30,000 spectators, among whom automobilists from the Vanderbilt Cup race made a liberal proportion, filled the stands and club inclosure, and tried the capacity of the railroad in handling the unusual traffic in the going and coming.

Three big stakes were on the card for decision, the most popular of these being the Belmont Park Weight for Age race, at two miles and a quarter, which aroused great enthusiasm, in spite of the fact that a commonplace field of four horses ran for it. Only three were named on the programme, but E. W. Jewett decided at the eleventh hour to send out his fast gelding Bedouin for the big fixture, and Bedouin went into the race as an added starter. The long distance event made a remarkably open betting contest, for, while St. Bellane always was the favorite, every horse of the four was heavily backed. The horses met on absolutely even terms under the scale of weights, Ostrich, the only four-year-old in the contest, having up 124 pounds, against the 13 pounds less carried by the three-year-olds.

The start at the three-quarter-mile pole in the backstretch was made with Right Royal first, but that colt was taken back at once, and waited with the other three-year-olds, Ostrich by force of circumstances and because he fought against restraint, going out to the front, and making the running fighting for his head, while St. Bellane dropped into second place, and Bedouin trailed last. The pace was slow as the horses passed the stand the first time and started on the last circuit of the mile and a half course, the order remaining the same until the field turned into the back stretch again, where Bedouin made a move forward and joined St. Bellane, Right Royal at this point lagging in a style that indicated that he was already in trouble. On the far turn, both St. Bellane and Bedouin went up to Ostrich, the race at that point seeming as much in doubt as at the start, but Ostrich's effort in making pace and fighting against his jockey told when St. Bellane made his effort at the head of the stretch, and as Bedouin, after moving up to the leaders, promptly tried to stop, St. Bellane slipped away in front, and from that point to the end held the stakes safe, winning pulled to a canter four lengths away from Ostrich, who, hard ridden after him, beat Bedouin three lengths for the place, with Right Royal only a length further back. The time, 3:57 2-5, went down as a track record, but only because it was the first race at the distance that has been run on the course.

The biggest event of the year for cross-country horses, the Champion Steeplechase, over a three-mile-and-a-half course, was run as the second race and brought out a field of seven crack steeplechasers, of which Thomas Hitchcock, Jr.'s, Hylas, ridden by Ray, always was the favorite, with Coligny second choice, and Ben Crockett, which made his first appearance as a steeplechaser on a metropolitan track, about the next best backed. Gansevoort went away in front at the start, Ben Crockett taking second place and rating along there into the back stretch for the first time, where Gansevoort dropped back, and Ben Crockett took command, a prospective contender being eliminated at that part of the race when Grandpa fell. Through two more rounds of the field Ben Crockett led at a fair pace, jumping surely and evenly, while in the last half of the last round Hylas and Coligny moved after him, Coligny coming to grief just as he began his move by being thrown by the riderless Grandpa, which had galloped on over the course with the field. Through the last half mile the race then was between Hylas and Ben Crockett, Hylas, splendidly ridden by Ray, getting up to the pacemaker just as they came to the last jump, and there passing him and winning ridden out by two lengths, while Ben Crockett beat Jimmy Lane ten lengths for second place. The gross value of the stakes was $11,075, the richest cross-country race of the Fall season.

Ten horses ran for the White Plains Handicap, six furlongs straight, for two-year-olds, the Whitney and Belmont Stables each being represented by a stable entry of two horses in the starters, while the Hildreth colt Security, brother to Dick Welles and Ort Wells, was the favorite, on the strength of trials for the race. Tiptoe, of the Belmont entry, broke best, but at once was passed by Security, who showed a neck in front and raced with Tiptoe for a little more than a quarter of a mile. Security then began to drop away, while Tiptoe's stable mate, Bridgeman, moved through to the front and galloped beside Security into the last quarter. There Snow closed from the rear with a sharp brush, and was fast overtaking Tiptoe at the end, Tiptoe, ridden out, just managing to win by a head, while Snow beat Bridgeman, third, a neck for second money.

The racing opened with a sensation, when Penrhyn, entered in the name of H. M. Zeigler, went out for the first race in the colors of J. A. Drake. The colt had been purchased at private sale in the forenoon, and was trained by Mr. Drake's trainer, Enoch Wishard, for just about two hours before starting, and being heavily backed by the stable and stable connections. Two hours in Trainer Wishard's hands worked a wonderful change in the colt, however, for he broke away and raced in a style utterly at variance with all his former races, and won away off from Arkirta, the favorite. SALE OF WHITNEY HORSES.

Thoroughbred Yearlings Offered at Auction on Behalf of Estate.

A consignment of thoroughbred yearling horses owned by the W. C. Whitney estate was offered at auction in the paddock at Belmont Park yesterday by the Fasig-Tipton Company to close up the affairs of the estate, the horses having been withheld from earlier sales as they were not in condition to go into the ring then. The animals sold are all well bred and from noted mares, but the prices straight through were small. Other lots of horses, notably those sent to the sale from the stable of R. T. Wilson, Jr.; also brought only moderate prices. The sales were as follows:

KENTUCKY MEETING CLOSED.

Glenwood M. Won Stoll Stake, Feature of Last Day's Events.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 14.—Glenwood M., the heavily played favorite, won the Stoll Stake to-day, which was the feature event of the Kentucky Breeders' meeting. Four heats were necessary to decide the event. Leonardo won the first in the fast time of 2:08¼. Glenwood M. then took the next three in succession.

The 2:20 pace went to the prohibitive favorite, Dan P., in straight heats. He was conceded the race after the first heat, and there was no pooling. The last race was long-drawn-out. Emma Brook, the favorite, was given the race under the ruling of the National Trotting Association, because she stood best in the summaries before sundown.

During the meeting which closed to-day ninety-six horses earned part of the $69,350 distributed by the association, and out of this number twenty-one earned $1,000 or over. Twenty-four drivers won races during the meeting, while Ed F. Geers heads the list with three wins to his credit and A. Thomas, Dickerson, Padgitt, A. McDonald, Murphy, and Spencer won two each. What is perhaps a record was made during the meeting, as thirty-three heats were trotted in 2:10 or better and thirty-one heats paced in 2:10 or better. Seventy-one owners held horses to get part of the money, the largest single winners being Howard Cobb and A. McDonald, owners of Miss Adbell, winner of the Kentucky Futurity. T. W. Murphy was second on the list of winning owners, the Hillindale Farm third, and James L. Dodge fourth. Summaries:

Chicago Clubs to Have Boxing.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—Boxing under the watchful gaze of "cautious, prudent, and careful officers" of Chief Collins's staff, will be revived in the clubrooms of the Chicago Athletic Association and other organizations of Chicago, according to the latest opinion of Corporation Counsel Lewis, submitted by him to the Police Chief yesterday. The restrictions put upon the exhibitions, however, are such that professional promoters of boxing are barred from further participation in the events, and admirers of the sport can no longer pay an admission fee to witness them.

The hope of the many promoters that Mayor Dunne would permit the resumption of the contests in which noted pugilists contested before thousands of spectators was shattered by the legal opinion, which was reinforced by the statements of the Mayor and Chief Collins.

BELMONT PARK RECORDS SURPRISE OF TURF YEAR

Time in Further Danger When First-Class Horses Meet.

SYSONBY AND ETHELBERT

Comparison of Performance of Mr. Keene's Horse with World's Record Holder.

Time, as a factor in thoroughbred racing, has had a prominence almost unprecedented since the Belmont Park Autumn meeting began and world's records were beaten or equaled with such frequency as to raise doubts as to the accuracy of the measured distances of the course. The proof, by resurveying the track, that the distances were correct, and the fact that in many cases experts among the horsemen caught the time of the fastest performances at Belmont Park as even faster than the official timer made them, have dissipated the doubts, and at the same time have raised the new question among horsemen as to what may happen when really first-class horses race over the new course.

The time records made by Roseben and Kiamesha, both maidens through one season of racing, Roseben having won his first race late as a three-year-old and Klamesha having won hers in her early three-year-old form, has led to speculation as to what might have happened had some of the old time record-holders received the chance to race over the great course at Queens. Roseben's six-furlong world's record led to some idle gossip about the chance of a special race between that excellent sprinter and the champion of the year, the unbeaten Sysonby, but nothing could come of this as Sysonby had been retired for the season. The opinion of a majority of the most successful trainers concerning such a race was that should Sysonby meet Roseben when in his real form, Sysonby would beat Roseben in the first furlong or quarter of a mile, and then would have so easy a race for the remainder of any distance that they might run that there would be no chance for records.

On the same line of argument horsemen explain the reason why Sysonby in sweeping all before him this season beat no records, though he did travel marvelously fast in some of his races, simply because his flight of speed was such that there was more danger in trying to restrain him than in letting him gallop on. In all his races, save only his first of the season, Sysonby treated his opponents as it was suggested he would treat Roseben, and had them safely beaten after the first quarter of a mile, the colt never having been called on to do more than gallop in any race except the Metropolitan Handicap, in which he ran a dead heat with Race King.

Racegoers are familiar with the romping victories of Sysonby in subsequent races, when thoroughly fit, but easily as he won in all his other contests, he ran fast enough on several occasions to make the possibilities seem almost unlimited when Sysonby shall come to Belmont Park next year, should Mr. Keene be disposed to send him after records. Considering both the weight carried and the speed of the race, Sysonby's victory in the Tidal Stakes, one mile and a quarter in 2:05, with 126 pounds up, his first effort following the dead heat for the Metropolitan Handicap, was probably the greatest race ever run by a three-year-old. Another of Sysonby's notable races, and one that has led to comparison of his performance with that of the world's record holder for two miles and a quarter, Ethelbert, was for the Annual Champion Stakes, Sysonby's last race of the season. Ethelbert, the best horse of his time, like Sysonby, was of English blood, though bred in this country, Ethelbert being by Eothen-Maori, his dam, who raced here before being sent to the stud, having been the first horse to run a mile in a race faster than 1:40. Ethelbert, when four years old, in 19[illegible], set the standing mark for two miles and a quarter in winning the Brighton Cup for Perry Belmont, his time for that race being 3:49 1-5. Against that Sysonby ran a similar distance on the slower Sheepshead Bay track in 3:54, or four and four-fifths seconds slower. There was the difference, aside from that between the Brighton Beach and Sheepshead Bay tracks, that Ethelbert, a four-year-old, had just his scale weight, [illegible] pounds, up, and, with the advantage of a pacemaker, won, ridden out to the last ounce, while Sysonby, a three-year-old, carried five pounds more than scale weight, or 115, and, making his own pace, romped in as he pleased, under a pull through nearly all the last quarter.

Ethelbert's record stands for itself, and since time in racing has taken its recent prominence, the argument has been raised that, comparatively, Sysonby's race over a cup course ranks with or close behind the world's record of Mr. Belmont's famous horse. Brighton Beach, until Belmont Park was reconstructed for the Fall meeting just ended, was noted as the fastest track in the East, and one of the fastest in the country. Horsemen who are familiar with the course over which Ethelbert's mark was made long have been accustomed to base estimates of time made there on the station of the tide, the track being so close to the sea that the ebb and flow are said to have a great effect on the going. It is supposed to be at its fastest and best on a flood tide, just before the highest point of the tide. Estimates by horsemen of the difference in time between Brighton Beach and Sheepshead Bay vary from a second to the mile to a second and four-fifths, and though that difference does not show in the records of the two tracks, a plausible explanation of this is in the fact that there usually is much difference between the quality of the horses that race at the two tracks, the Brighton track, even in its present progressive time, rarely attracting the best horses of the great stables, which prefer to rest between the close at Sheepshead Bay and the opening of the Saratoga meeting.

Estimating the difference in the opportunity for speed between the tracks anywhere between the second and second and four-fifths, comparison of the races of Sysonby and Ethelbert, and taking the fractional time into account, [illegible] to bring the two very close together as to the performance over a two-and-a-quarter-mile course. Ethelbert had the wonderful old mare Imp as his chief opponent in a field of four, and Imp, after her own best style, went out and set a pace that was the most terrific ever witnessed in a race over the distance, leaving all but Ethelbert far behind her almost immediately after the start. Ethelbert trailed at her heels for a trifle more than two miles, splendidly rated fast as he was carried, and then, going on in the stretch, got up and won his brilliant victory. Sysonby simply broke out before his field in the Annual Champion, and at each effort by Olseau to get to him, slipped away further without the appearance of effort, and won, pulling up.

The fractional time of Ethelbert's race was: Quarter, 0:25 2-5; three furlongs, 0:38 2-5; half mile, 0:50 1-5; five furlongs, 1:02; six furlongs, 1:15; seven furlongs, 1:28 3-5; mile, 1:41 3-5; mile and a quarter, 2:07; mile and three furlongs, 2:20; mile and a half, 2:32 3-5; mile and five furlongs, 2:45 1-5; mile and three-quarters, 2:57 4-5; mile and seven furlongs, 3:10 2-5; two miles, 3:23, and two miles and a quarter, 3:49 1-5, the second mile being in 1:41 2-5 and the last mile in 1:42 1-5. After the mile and a half, the existing records up to the full distance were beaten in Ethelbert's race. Sysonby's Annual Champion race in its fractional time was: Quarter, 0:24 4-5; three furlongs, 0:37; half mile, 0:49 1-5; five furlongs, 1:01 3-5; six furlongs, 1:14 3-5; seven furlongs, 1:28; mile, 1:41 2-5; mile and a quarter, 2:07 2-5; mile and three furlongs, 2:20 3-5; mile and a half, 2:34; mile and five furlongs, 2:46 4-5; mile and three quarters, 2:59 4-5; mile and seven furlongs, 3:12 4-5; two miles, 3:26 3-5; two miles and a quarter, 3:54. The second mile was in 1:45 1-5 and the last mile in 1:46 3-5.

In any estimate by horsemen allowance must be made for the difference in the Brighton Beach and Sheepshead Bay courses, and there also must be considered the difference in the style of winning. The wider margin of the Brighton Beach experts, putting the seaside track at an advantage of a second and four-fifths to the mile over Sheepshead Bay, would bring the estimated difference in the two performances down to a second and a fifth, and with the additional allowance for the easy manner of Sysonby's win there would be little room for choice between the two on the purely fanciful comparison.

POST-SEASON BASEBALL.

National League Teams Win Three Games Out of Five from Americans.

In the five post-season series of baseball games between National and American League teams the Nationals were triumphant in three. The New Yorks won the last game of the series with the Philadelphia Athletics for the world's championship; the Chicago Nationals outbatted the Americans of that city and finally won by 8 to 5, while the St. Louis Nationals scored a run in the ninth inning and shut out their American rivals by a score of 1 to 0. The Boston Americans and Nationals finished their series yesterday, although the question of supremacy between the two teams was settled in favor of Collins's team on the day before. The Americans added a double header to their credit, the first game being easily won, but Fraser kept the Americans guessing throughout in the second.

The scores:

AT BOSTON.

										R.	H.	E.
Nationals	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	1	0	2	7	2

Canoeists in Annual Session.

The annual meeting of the American Canoe Association was held at the Hotel St. Denis yesterday. Delegates were present from Pittsburg, Buffalo, Rochester, Boston, Philadelphia, and Trenton.

During the morning session the Executive Committee passed upon committee reports and in the afternoon amendments to the constitution and governing rules were considered. About fifty covers were laid at the informal banquet between the sessions.

The camp next year will be on Sugar Island, the property of the association in the St. Lawrence River. The date will probably be set for two weeks in August. The officers of the association are: Commodore—H. Lansing Quick; Secretary—W. W. Crosby; Treasurer—G. F. Mathers.

AMHERST, 23; BOWDOIN, 0.

AMHERST, Mass., Oct. 14.—Amherst won a well-played game from Bowdoin this afternoon by a score of 23 to 0. Bowdoin never seriously threatened the Amherst goal, though her line held well in the first half, and the victors could only tally once during that period. In the second half Amherst played much faster and made long gains on end runs. Touchdowns were made by Kilbourne, Helmholz, and Bryant, (2.) Shattuck kicked two goals and Lewis one. Twenty and fifteen minute halves were played.

Picked Up from the Diamond.

Mathewson's wonderful pitching during the world's series was the main topic of conversation among the "rooters" as they filed out of the Polo Grounds yesterday. Rarely has a pitcher in the history of organized baseball officiated three times in the box during a week with such consummate skill and success. His three victories, and all shut-outs, over the new champions of the American League, will be a conspicuous feature in the future records of the game.

Bresnahan's excellent catching display in the world's championship series was something of a revelation to "fans" who did not think he possessed so much ability. His work was slightly marred, however, by constant objections to the decisions of umpires.

The attendance at the Polo Grounds yesterday looked to be thousands more than on Tuesday last, but the official figures show there were 715 less persons present.

As soon as the game at the Polo Grounds was finished yesterday the "rooters" swarmed on the field and made a dash for the newly made champions to secure souvenirs from them. All got to their dressing room in safety, but the demand for remembrances was so great that some of the players tossed hats, belts, and other wearing apparel from the veranda to the crowd below.

Capt. Cross of the Athletics mildly reproved Bender for being so hasty in picking up Bresnahan's bunted ball in the sixth inning yesterday, as it had every appearance of rolling foul.

President William Kavanaugh of the Southern League sent a telegram to George Tebeau, who is in this city, yesterday, that he would be unable to attend the meeting of the National Board of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues, but that he was willing to reiterate his statement made in reference to Howard C. Griffith if a meeting could be called at either Louisville or St. Louis.

CRESCENT SHOOTERS START AT THE TRAPS

Brooklyn Club Men Show Good Form at Clay Targets.

TIE FOR THE LOTT TROPHY

W. W. Marshall and J. J. Keyes Carry Off All the First Prizes in Fifteen Target Events.

Judging from the turnout of the trap-shooting contingent of the Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn at the traps at Bay Ridge yesterday the season, which will last until next April, promises to be the most successful in the history of America's champion amateur trap shooting organization. It was the first shoot of the season, and Chairman Charles J. McDermott and his associates of the Shooting Committee had arranged a varied and interesting programme for the afternoon's sport. The weather was all that could be desired for good shooting, but the champions' favorite weather is either a heavy fall of snow, combined with a gale blowing in the neighborhood of fifty miles an hour, or when the thermometer is hovering around zero. Upon such occasions the Crescents have done some of their best shooting and invariably have large attendances.

The special feature of yesterday's schedule was the first shoot for the Lott trophy, at fifty targets each. H. M. Brigham and W. W. Marshall tied at forty-seven each, with J. J. Keyes and W. C. Damron having twenty-three each. The contest for the Snyder trophy, at twenty-five targets each, brought out the best shooters on the grounds. The result was a tie at twenty-five targets between J. J. Keyes and W. W. Marshall, while the scratch men, A. G. Southworth and H. M. Brigham, had to be content with twenty-four and twenty-three, respectively.

Among the other important shoots was the Mullerite Trophy, which attracted ten contestants. The winner was O. C. Grinnell, Jr., who shot in excellent form during the latter part of last season. Grinnell, with a handicap of two, came off with a clean score, while Keyes and Brigham tied at twenty-two each. There were four fifteen-target events for handsome prizes offered by the Shooting Committee. In these W. W. Marshall carried off two and J. J. Keyes two.

The scores:

Crescent A. C. Lacrosse Team Won.

The Crescent Athletic Club lacrosse team defeated Stevens Institute by the score of 4 goals to 3 at Bay Ridge yesterday. The Stevens team, although defeated, played a fast game, Roberts and Davis doing the best work. Raymond and E. Miller each shot a goal in rapid succession in the first half, and Roberts scored a goal for the visitors. The play was much faster in the second half, and both teams scored twice, O'Rourke making both goals for the Crescents and Roberts and Davis scoring one each for Stevens. Line-up:

Crescent.	Position.	Stevens.
Ford	Goal	Sturkens
Moses	Point	Hamilton
C. Miller	Cover point	Youmans
Dobby	First defense	Correa
Waddell	Second defense	Smith
Kelley	Third defense	McBurney

Raymond	Outside home	Helme
E. Miller	Inside home	Davis

Goals—O'Rourke, 2; Raymond, 1; E. Miller, 1; Roberts, 2; Davis, 1. Referee—Louis J. Doyle.

Special Race for Mile Record.

In an effort to bring out the fastest horses that raced at the Belmont Park meeting and made records over the new track there the Metropolitan Jockey Club, through W. C. Edwards, the Secretary, has announced a special race at one mile, to be run next Saturday at the Jamaica track, weights to be adjusted on a special scale, with $1,500 added, and $1,000 extra to the winner in case the mile record is beaten. The wish of the Jamaica Club is to bring together Kiamesha, which equaled the world's mile record; Roseben, which made a new world's record for six furlongs, and Disobedient, regarded as the smartest two-year-old that the Fall season has developed, together with any others that may be entered. The Jamaica track has been carefully worked over for the Fall meeting, which opens to-morrow, and the officers of the club believe that it will be as fast as the fastest of the mile tracks.

Vogel Brothers

Present a Series of

New Fall Overcoats for Men.

We have pictured for you here just one of our new Fall models in medium length overcoats.

It is drawn from the figure of a living model wearing the garment.

Would you want to appear better dressed? Could you appear better dressed?

We think not.

Luxurious Silk Lined Overcoats at $18.

Medium length Overcoats (exactly like cut alongside) of black unfinished worsteds, silk lined to edge of lapels. We know of no custom tailor who would make such a garment under $25.

The matter of choosing a model that will express your individuality is easy here, for diversity is a factor of this showing. You may have a full draped back, our new Chesterfield with military back and deep centre vent, or a very conservative model.

At $12. Medium length Overcoats of black unfinished worsted, tan coverts and Oxford gray coverts and Venetians.

At $15. Medium length Overcoats, full back and Chesterfield models of tan coverts, black Thibets, black worsted cheviots and Oxford overcoatings.

THE SEASON'S CRICKET.

Team A, Staten Island, Champions of Metropolitan League.

The contest for the cricket championship of New York has at last been finished and the question of individual supremacy decided. The race for the pennant in the Metropolitan District Cricket League series was closer than it has been for years, and more games were won and lost by scant margins than ever before, when one team has been so far in the lead as to rob the contest of a great deal of its interest.

The season has been a very busy one, for outside of the championship series of the Metropolitan League and the New York Cricket Association two international matches were played, and the inter-city game with Philadelphia was revived after a lapse of five years.

A new departure was the inter-city match between the juniors of the two cities, and so successful was the outcome that an annual struggle is assured.

A new record for the United States and Canada was established on the occasion of the visit of the Bermuda team, it being the first time that two "centuries" were made against a foreign eleven. The match against the famous Marylebone Club of London, which attracted considerable attention, was productive of a good contest and proved a financial success.

Secretary Fred F. Kelly of the Metropolitan League has just compiled the official figures for that organization. Team A of the Staten Island Club won the pennant with a percentage of .800. They were defeated but twice during the season, and had two drawn games out of the dozen played. J. L. Poyer of the Brooklyn Nomads was the premiem batter, and was the only player to score a "century" in the series.

The lead in the bowling averages changed several times during the latter part of the season, and was so stubbornly contested that only the official figures after the last game disclosed the winner. Three trundlers ran almost neck and neck, J. R. Tattersall of Brooklyn, T. D. Killick of Staten Island, and H. Rushton of Brooklyn, and they finished in the order named.

Sixteen scores of 50 and over were made in the series, three of which were scored by A. G. Laurie and two each by J. L. Poyer, C. P. Hurditch, and J. P. Stuart, while the following players succeeded in reaching the half century once: G. N. Boyd, A. S. Durrant, C. H. E. Griffith, G. Macpherson, E. B. Reece, H. C. Smart, and E. H. L. Steinthal.

The "hat trick" was accomplished twice by league bowlers, C. H. Clarke and A. G. Laurie being the performers.

The best bowling feat was that of T. D. Killick, who captured nine wickets for eleven runs against the Brooklyn Wanderers, a peculiar feature being that his club was defeated even with this remarkable record.

METROPOLITAN LEAGUE.

MUNGER DEFEATED PETTIT.

New Haven Athlete Won Point Prize at Physical Culture Show.

O. H. Munger of New Haven won the point competition for the week at the Madison Square Garden Physical Culture Show, defeating C. R. Pettit by three points. Max Spitzner, also of New Haven, finished third. There was a big crowd to witness the closing athletic events last night. The feature of the programme was the 220-yard dash, which was won by C. R. Pettit, with O. H. Munger a close second. W. E. Finlay of the New York Athletic Club was first in the 50-yard hurdles, finishing in the fast time of 0:06 4-5. W. Frank of the Irish-Americans had no trouble in winning the three-mile run. Summaries:

WOMAN'S GOLF TITLE WON BY MISS MACKAY

National Championship Goes to Boston for First Time.

MISS CURTIS RUNNER-UP

Latter Defeated on Morris County Links by One Hole in a Closely Played Match.

Miss Pauline Mackay of the Oakley Golf Club, at Wollaston, Mass., won the women's National golf championship yesterday in the final match on the links of the Morris County Golf Club, near Morristown, N. J. Miss Mackay beat Miss Margaret Curtis of the Essex County Country Club of Manchester, Mass., by the narrow margin of one hole.

The game brought two of the best Bostonians together for the women's biggest golf honor of the year. It carried a large gallery, the metropolitan delegation turning out in fully as large numbers as if it, too, had a representative for the trophy. Miss Mackay has been noted for several years as one of the steadiest and truest golfers among the fair devotees of the game. She is the present champion of the Boston Women's Golf Association.

The first hole was halved in four, Miss Mackay starting with a poor drive, but she made a grand recovery, getting close to the green. Miss Curtis, whose long driving has made her almost phenomenal among women golfers, overdrove the second hole and won handily in 3 to 5, Miss Mackay again topping. Miss Curtis made a beautiful 200-yard drive to the third hole, while Miss Mackay again disappointed her friends by her erratic style, for her drive was short, and then she went into the bunker, but a fortunate put enabled her to halve the hole in 4. The fourth was halved in 6, and poor work cost Miss Mackay the fifth hole, Miss Curtis winning by ordinary play only in 6 to 8, which gave her a lead of two. Miss Mackay won the sixth hole in 5 to 6 through a lucky approach, but she lost the next in 4 to 5. The eighth was halved, and when Miss Curtis won the ninth in 3 to 5, the latter had the comfortable lead of 3 up, with the game half over.

A triumph for Miss Curtis now seemed assured. The tenth was halved in four, and then Miss Curtis began to give an exhibition of erratic play such as had characterized Miss Mackay's game in the earlier part of the match. Miss Curtis made a splendid two-hundred-yard drive on the eleventh hole, but then landed in the bunker and lost in 6 to 7. A long approach gave Miss Mackay the next hole in 4 to 5. The thirteenth was halved, and then to the surprise of the gallery, on the long fourteenth hole, Miss Curtis lost in 6 to 7, and Miss Mackay had tied the match. The following long hole was halved in 7, and then Miss Mackay got the lead for the first time on the sixteenth green, which she won in 5 to 7, Miss Curtis dropping upon the railroad track on her drive. Miss Mackay's steadiness had come to her rescue in good time, and by admirable play she halved the remaining two holes, and had the game and the championship. This is the first time that the woman's National championship has gone to the Boston locality. The cards are:

Miss Mackay, out.....4 5 4 6 8 5 5 5 5—47
Miss Curtis, out.....4 3 4 6 5 6 4 5 3—40
Miss Mackay, in.....4 6 4 5 6 7 5 4 5—46—93
Miss Curtis, in.....4 7 5 5 7 7 7 4 5—51—91

MILITARY ATHLETES MEET.

Annual Election of Officers of League Unanimous—Show Decided Upon.

There was not a warlike note about the annual meeting of the Military Athletic League last night at the Twelfth Regiment Armory. All was serene and unanimous, in which the meeting proved a contrast remarked upon by several of the members present. Col. George R. Dyer of the Twelfth Regiment and President of the league, was absent, and in his place Major C. J. Wolf, Seventy-fourth Regiment of Buffalo, N. Y., presided. Each of the thirty-one organizations in the league was represented by a prominent officer. There was no opposition ticket in the field, so that as far as the election went it was a perfunctory matter.

There was some discussion upon the subject of holding the annual Military Show and Tournament in the Madison Square Garden this season. It was evident that nearly every member was in favor of holding the show, which has become a feature with those interested in military pageants and affairs in this city. It was decided that the tournament would be held as usual and that it be held early in the year during the Winter months instead of as late as the month of May, which has proved to be unprofitable. So far as the finances of the league are concerned, they are in a flourishing condition, the treasury showing a balance on hand of $11,500.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were: President—Gen. Nelson H. Henry; First Vice President—Col. William F. Morris; Second Vice President—Col. John G. Eddy; Third Vice President—Naval Lieut. John H. Barnard; Recording Secretary—Major W. A. Turpin; Corresponding Secretary—Capt. David Wilson; Treasurer—Capt. N. B. Thurston.

COLLEGE ELEVENS HAVE EASY GAMES

But Both Columbia and Harvard Make Poor Showing.

WEST POINT TEAM BEATEN

Yale and Princeton Make Good Scores, and Penn Does Passably Well Against North Carolina.

There were two surprises on the football field yesterday. The first was the defeat of the crippled West Point team by the eleven representing the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, and the second was the small score made by Harvard against the team from the Springfield Training School. Last Wednesday Yale tallied 29 points without much effort against the Springfield team. Yesterday Harvard scored 12. While comparative scores mean little, the fumbling and generally poor play of the Crimson eleven was unexpected and disappointing.

Against a strong eleven West Point's defeat would not have been surprising, in spite of the hard luck she has been playing in, in the matter of injuries, but against the Virginia Polytechnic boys she was certainly not expected to meet defeat. In the first half the army lads had a total of 16 points tallied against them, and while in the second half they braced up, they were able to make but 6 while holding the Southerners to no score.

All the other big teams won their games. Yale made a good total against Holy Cross, and Princeton overwhelmed Bucknell. Pennsylvania only tallied 17 against North Carolina, but her showing was not particularly discouraging. Cornell did not play, and Columbia won from Williams in a close game, of which the Blue and White have no cause to be especially proud. The scores of the eight leading games in the East were:

Yale, 30; Holy Cross, 0.
Harvard, 12; Springfield Training School, 0.
Princeton, 48; Bucknell, 0.
Pennsylvania, 17; North Carolina, 0.
Columbia, 11; Williams, 5.
Virginia Polytechnic, 16; West Point, 6.
Indians, 12; Virginia, 0.
Annapolis, 6; Dickinson, 0.
Colgate, 16; Dartmouth, 10.

WILLIAMS PUSHES COLUMBIA.

Morningside Eleven Wins Game by Close Score of 11 to 5.

With a patched-up teem Columbia defeated Williams yesterday at the American League grounds by the score of 11 to 5. The work of the Morningside players was far from satisfactory, the back field showing a woeful lack of system and energy. For a brief stretch of about ten minutes the players showed some speed, but they relapsed into slipshod play, although scoring two touch-downs.

During the game Columbia lost fifty yards by offside play, the principal offender being Brown, who alone was penalized thirty yards. This is his first appearance on the field this year, and he did not cover himself with glory. Fisher at left end and Seltzer at right tackle carried the team along. Their work was the redeeming feature of the game.

In the second half Columbia put in an almost new team. Williams took a brace and scored in this half, and had there been five minutes more playing time the visitors would probably have tallied another touch-down, as they were pushing the Columbia players all over the gridiron.

Columbia was demoralized from the kick-off. Ryan sent the leather flying into Williams's territory and it was brought back to the thirty-yard line. By quick formations and excellent team work the Williams players gained steadily at first. The oval was worked toward the Columbia's goal by sending her end through the Columbia ends and tackles for short gains. With the ball on their thirty-yard line Columbia braced and held the visitors for downs.

Fisher punted out of danger, but Williams returned the kick and Donovan secured the ball on the twenty-yard line. After short gains Fisher punted for Columbia to Williams's forty-five-yard line, where Columbia secured the leather on downs and rushed it down the field by short drives. With the ball on Williams's fifteen-yard line Fisher was sent through tackle for four yards, and on the next play broke through the same place for a touch-down. He missed the try for goal and the half ended shortly afterward with the score, Columbia, 5; Williams, 0.

The second half opened with an exchange of punts, the ball going to Columbia on her forty-five-yard line. The Morningside players were penalized several times. Fisher punted to Williams's thirty-yard line, where a fumble again gave Columbia the ball. Seltzer ran around the end for fifteen yards and followed with eight more through tackle. On the third down Seltzer was again given the ball, this time for a touch-down, Fisher kicking the goal.

Columbia discovered Williams's weak point in the negro, who played right gurad for the Massachusetts eleven, and directed most of its plays against him. Williams secured the ball in midfield, and rushing it down the field, swept the Columbia players off their feet. With six yards to go, A. Brown was pushed over the line for a touch-down, Bates failing at the try-for goal.

During the remainder of the play the ball was kept in Columbia's territory, but the New England players were unable to add to their total. Line-up:

YALE, 30; HOLY CROSS, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 14.—For the first three minutes of play Holy Cross worried Yale to-day, netting fifteen yards in three dives through Erwin, but after that Yale held all attacks and swamped the visitors' heavy and aggressive team with a total of five touch-downs, netting 30 points, to 0. Yale's goal was not threatened at any time.

Yale's left wing did effective work. There was no holding them, and gains were made practically at will through the Worcester line. Stevenson made two long end runs, Quarter Back Jones made three runs, one for seventy yards, and the entire Yale back field made good gains. Yale's playing was extremely fast all through the game. Line-up:

HARVARD, 12; SPRINGFIELD, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 14.—The Springfield Training School football eleven, which Yale defeated in New Haven last Wednesday by the score of 29 to 0, held Harvard down today on Soldiers' Field to the small total of 12 points. Harvard's low score was due to wretched fumbling and her inability to pierce the visiting line for telling gains.

In the first few minutes of play the ball changed hands on almost every play. Harvard scored once in each half, carrying the ball through Brill and Parker for needed gains.

Harvard introduced Yale's half back kick with indifferent success. Once Foster sent the ball rolling for 50 yards, but another time, in the beginning of the first half, Springfield blocked the ball, and it went to Harvard's 20-yard line. Here Foster fell on it, saving Harvard from a score. On the next play Foster lost 9 more yerds on a fumble, but Brill punted out of danger. When Springfield fumbled Brill's kick Harvard got the ball on the 40-yard line and rushed it over for a touch-down.

In the second half there was more fumbling and more kicking, until finally it was Harvard's ball on Springfield's 41-yard line. From here they carried it over for a touch-down. Line-up:

Harvard, 12. — Position. — S. T. S., 0.

PRINCETON, 48; BUCKNELL, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 14.—Princeton simply overwhelmed Bucknell this afternoon, defeating the Pennsylvanians by the score of 48 to 0. The Tigers played in splendid form, but their opponents showed lamentable weaknesses. In attack the visitors could do nothing, and succeeded in making their first down only twice.

Princeton started the game with a rush and Dillon drove the team, furiously sending Bard and Daub for constant gains outside of tackle. After four minutes of play McCormick went through for the first touch-down. On the kick-off Bucknell got her first chance to test the strength of the Tiger formations, but on the third rush discovered that she had been held for downs. Bard got loose for ten yards around the end and ten more was gained by steady bucking when McCormick went over for another score. The Tigers scored almost at will after this and the half ended with a total of 37 to 0.

In the second only two touch-downs were scored, and one was by Dillon, who worked a quarter back run to perfection and slipped around the left end for thirty-yards, making the most spectacular play of the game. The line-up:

Princeton, 48. — Position. — Bucknell, 0.
Brashear, Tooker....Left end......Goldsmith

Touch-downs—McCormick, 2; Daub, 3; Brashear, Dillon, Rafferty. Safety—Talbot. Goals from touch-downs—Fryer, 6. Referee—Mr. Fultz. Umpire—Mr. Murphy. Time of halves—Twenty and fifteen minutes.

COLGATE, 16; DARTMOUTH, 10.

HANOVER, Oct. 14.—Dartmouth lost a fiercely contested game to Colgate this afternoon by a score of 16 to 10. Colgate scored early in the game on a sixty-yard run by Castleman, and a goal from the field from the forty-five-yard line by Capt. Runge. Dartmouth tied the score on touch-downs by Rich and Bankart. Rich scored through good line bucking and Bankart on a fumble.

In the second half Dartmouth was superior for several minutes, and seemed likely to score, but on Colgate's five-yard-line she lost the ball for offside play, and Colgate rushed it the whole length of the field for the winning touch-down. The work of Runge and Castleman was as good as the best ever seen on the Dartmouth oval. Line-up:

Colgate, 16. — Position. — Dartmouth, 10.
Anderson.........Left end..........Church

Touch-downs—Castleman, (2,) Rich, Bankart. Goals from touch-downs—Runge, 2. Goal from field—Runge. Referee—Mr. Pendleton. Umpire—Mr. Ridgeley. Linesmen—Mr. McCabe, Dartmouth, and Mr. Mason, Colgate. Time—Twenty and fifteen minute halves.

MICHIGAN, 18; VANDERBILT, 0.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Oct. 14.—Michigan defeated Vanderbilt on Ferry Field to-day by a score of 18 to 0. Michigan negotiated its three touch-downs by pounding for short and steady gains for almost the length of the field in each instance. Vanderbilt did not earn a first down once, and Michigan was held for downs but in one instance. Tom Hammond, Curtis, and Garrets starred particularly for Michigan, the former making the longest run of the day. Line-up:

Michigan, 18. — Position. — Vanderbilt, 0.

Touch-downs—Hammond, Curtis, Megoffin. Goals from touch-downs—Hammond, (3.) Referee—Mr. Starbuck of Cornell. Umpire—Mr. Hollister of Michigan. Linesmen—Mr. Merry of Vanderbilt and Mr. Holbrook of Leland Stanford. Time of game—Twenty-five-minute halves.

PENN., 17; NORTH CAROLINA, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 14.—The University of North Carolina football team played its first game in the North this afternoon with the University of Pennsylvania. Although defeated 17 to 0, the score does not show the merits of the visitors' playing. Old Penn had a decided advantage, as she outweighed the Southerners by ten pounds per man, but the visitors made up for this in their fleetness, besides being well drilled in the rudiments of the game. The weather was too warm for strenuous football.

From her own ten-yard-line Pennsylvania, by constant line plunges, crossed the Southerners' goal for a touch-down after ten minutes of hard playing. Lamson made the touch-down, but Torrey missed an easy goal. In the second half Pennsylvania showed more dash and vim. Lamson, Draper, Sheble, and Folwell were consistent gainers. Two more touch-downs were made, while a fumble robbed Penn of another in the last few minutes of play. Line-up:

WEST POINT, Oct. 14.—West Point was defeated this afternoon by Virginia Polytechnic by a score of 16 to 6. The visitors played a good game, and West Point was on the defensive most of the time. Carpenter made most of Virginia's gains, Christy alone doing well for West Point.

The game opened with an exchange of kicks. Carpenter then carried the ball around right end twenty-five yards, which he followed with a place kick for the field. Five minutes later he touched left end again for twenty-five yeards, and Treadwell took the ball over for a touch-down. Virginia scored again in this half, Wilson tallying.

West Point opened the second half with a series of short rushes, which ended in Christy's carrying the ball over. The rest of the half was spent in fruitless attacks on the line by both sides. West Point is cast down over the result. Line-up:

CARLISLE INDIANS, 12; U. OF V., 0.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 14.—Eight thousand people saw the Carlisle Indians defeat the University of Virginia eleven on the gridiron here this afternoon by a score of 12 to 0. Carlisle won the toss and chose the goal from which the wind was blowing. In fifteen minutes Capt. Bowen had carried the ball over for a touch-down. Carlisle kept the ball in Virginia territory the rest of the half, but failed to score again, once losing it on Virginia's five-yard line on a foul. In the second half the superior strength, weight, and fitness of the Indians were clearly apparent, and it was by sheer good luck that Virginia kept her goal from being crossed only once. Line-up:

NAVY, 6; DICKINSON, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 14.—The navy won from Dickinson here this afternoon by a score of 6 to 0, after a fine contest. The two teams played each other to a standstill last season, and both were determined to win. To-day's game was a repetition of that match. The navy's touch-down and goal were scored in the last thirty seconds of play. The navy gained ground consistently and deserved the game. Dickinson could not gain, but put up a splendid defensive game. The long punts of Davis kept the navy from scoring in the first half and for most of the second. Line-up:

EXETER, 20; HARVARD, '09, 0.

EXETER, N. H., Oct. 14.—Fast work early in the game and a good defense later enabled Phillips Exeter to defeat the Harvard freshmen 20 to 0 this afternoon. Exeter scored in the first four minutes of play and two other scores followed in quick succession. The game then settled down to a punting contest, in which department Harvard excelled. There were a number of brilliant runs during the game, Bergin of Exeter making one of seventy yards and Weltzel of the same team another of fifty yards. Touch-downs were made by Hart, L. Cooney, Weltzel, and Bergin.

BROWN, 34; U. OF MAINE, 0.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 14.—The Brown football team this afternoon defeated the strong University of Maine eleven by a score of 34 to 0. The game afforded the first opportunity which the local eleven has had to really try out its power, and the showing was highly satisfactory, particularly in view of the fact that the score made by Harvard against the Maine players last Saturday was exceeded by twelve points. The visitors could do nothing against the powerful Brown attack until late in the second half, when Brown was playing a substitute team. Touch-downs were made by Welkert, Adams, (2,) and Mayhew. Russ kicked four goals from touch-downs.

ANDOVER, 17; YALE FRESHMEN, 5.

ANDOVER, Mass., Oct. 14.—Phillips Andover won a hard-fought game from the Yale freshmen here this afternoon by a score of 17 to 5. In the first half the game was plainly Andover's, but in the second period the playing of the Yale boys became more aggressive. The ball was in Andover's territory most of the time and the visitors scored on straight football.

Andover forced Yale in the first half to score a safety and later Daly kicked a goal from the fifteen-yard line. Touch-downs were also made by McKay and Daly.

REFORMING FOOTBALL TO REDUCE INJURIES

Players and Enthusiasts as Anxious as Any to Reach That End.

RESENT BRUTALITY CHARGES

Do Not Want Game Crippled by Adoption of Mistaken Rule Changes That Will Be Ineffectual.

For the past five years there has been more or less agitation for rule changes in football to accomplish the purpose of reducing the liability to injuries, or, as most reformers put it, eliminating its brutality. While in the main the changes inaugurated have been beneficial, they have gone but a short way toward attaining the end sought. The most important step yet taken has been that initiated by President Roosevelt in his recent calling of leading football advisers and coachers to the White House for a conference. The effect will be in a measure felt this Fall, but the real reforms which it promises will come next year, when this whole matter of legislation has been discussed for months in the most thorough, careful, and painstaking way it has yet been done. What these changes will be is a question which is at present occupying every devotee of the sport.

Five years ago the great cry was against the mass play. To the man who has real knowledge of the game there was nothing so ridiculous as this. Every football man knows by actual experience that it is rarely that a man is injured by the massing of players before, during, or after the ball is put in play. A mass play is necessarily slow moving and falls that result from it are not hard ones. The weight on the underbodies means nothing more than discomfort, and with the skilled player's quickly learned ability to protect his vulnerable parts there is little or no possibility of anything more serious than a slight sprain of wrist or ankle or knee.

The limitation of mass plays was brought about through two causes: First, it was done in propitiation of the popular outcry against their seeming brutality, and secondly it was a concession made to increase the spectators' enjoyment of the game. With the interest of the game President Roosevelt, speaking the popular mind, has no real concern, and that reason can be dismissed, therefore, while his seeking the advice he has is sufficient assurance that no concession to appearance alone will mark this reform.

The serious injuries in football come from two causes. First of all, momentum, and, second, the position of runner and tackler, which prevents them from protecting themselves from the effects of their violent impact. The best illustration of this was afforded by the frequent injuries to full backs in the days when the forwards, breaking through to block kicks, invariably plunged into the kicker, already off his balance and unable to protect himself, and downed him. Legislation properly stopped this contemptible practice. The protection of the catching back was another reform prompted by the same impulse, and serves again to illustrate the point. How to protect the runner in warding off tacklers in the open field is a difficult question to solve, but means will have to be devised to do so, if any real diminution of the number and seriousness of injuries is to be accomplished.

The talk about the brutality of football in the sense of the deliberate attempts to cripple a player and put him out of the play is ill-founded. There have been isolated instances of this recently, but for some years coachers have not instructed the practice of such tactics as they once undoubtedly did. The unsportsmanlike spirit of wishing to win through an opponent's misfortunes had no place in the gentleman, and better nature soon wiped out the wish. It was a part of the influence introduced by the promiscuous hiring of professionals to play, and died with the death of that pernicious practice. However, when it does crop up, as is once in a while the case, no penalty can be too severe to meet it, and permanent disqualification, not disqualification for a single game, should be inflicted. Popular sentiment would support such a step, and the offense certainly merits it.

The recent disgraceful scene at American League Park would have been avoided but for that very spirit. The man who jumped on the prostrate player did a dastardly trick, but did it in a punitive spirit, to revenge an even more culpable offense on the part of the player who was on the ground. While in no sense condoning the second blow, it was the first that caused all the trouble. This was a case of where one player attacked another, his opponent, without excuse or effort at concealment even, for the sole reason that the man attacked was the most brilliant of his side, and if eliminated from the game would give his opponents a greater chance to win. This win-at-any-cost spirit has no part in sport of any character.

When critics talk of the brutalities of football every lover of the game is up in arms. Every one of them will contend that it is not brutal, and that it tends to develop hardihood and courage. That it is rough, and perhaps unnecessarily so, and lays the players too much open to injury, is another question, and every player and devotee wants to see the injuries lessened, and will give hearty support to any such movement. But they do not want unnecessary restrictions placed upon the possibilities of play through a mistaken idea that they will lessen injuries. As to the advisability of making such changes as the limitation of mass plays in order to stimulate popular interest in the spectacular side of the sport there are two opinions.

One side maintains that the game is played by college men for college men, and that they, understanding the fine points of the play, can follow the ball even in mass plays sufficiently well to maintain their interest. They, as a rule, believe that to increase open play to the detriment of line plunging means to lessen the offensive strength of the teams and to strike a blow at the most effective means of ground gaining, that of disheartening the opposing eleven by piercing its centre for steady, short gains of three yards each. They therefore oppose any legislation that tends to further restrict line attacks.

The other side maintains that the game thrives on the public interest in it, and that concession should be made to the public. The game undoubtedly thrives financially, and the money made in football goes to support other branches of sport that are not self-sustaining; but, on the other hand, the money made and the money spent in football is a serious, and many think proper, cause of criticism. The whole question of gate receipts and the unseemly scramble for tickets involving ticket speculation and kindred evils has provoked much unfavorable comment, and the best element in football would undoubtedly like to see the gate eliminated from the sport, restricting attendance at the games to invitation in the big cities, and allowing it to be free, where it is practicable, at West Point.

These are the problems that face the reformers who will undertake the reconstruction of the rules this Winter. On the manner in which their work is done depends the permanence of football in the American colleges. But the various questions should not be confounded. Limitation of injury should not be called elimination of brutality and increasing public interest should not necessarily be accepted as beneficial or desirable. The best interest of the game is what should be considered, and the best interest of the game and of sport in general calls for the exertion of intelligent effort indefatigably to reduce the crippling and maiming of players that have been either so unfortunately frequent of late or had unusual prominence through the larger number of men participating in the sport.

Local Association Football Players In Cricket to Select Eleven.

Two picked elevens from the Metropolitan Association Football League played an exhibition game at Cosmopolitan Park, Newark, yesterday, for the purpose of selecting a team to meet the Pilgrim football team of England at the Polo Grounds next Saturday. The contest was witnessed by the Executive Committee of the league, which will select the local eleven to-morrow night. Nearly every team in the organization was represented, and the game resulted in a score of 7 to 2 in favor of Team B, which was made up of players from the Celtic Athletic Club of Harrison, Hollywood Inn Football Club of Yonkers; the Bronx Rangers, Favorite Football Club of Staten Island, the Brooklyn Football Club, the Caledonians of Manhattan, Paterson Football Club, and the Hudson Football Club of Kearny.

The opposing team was composed of players from the Camerons, West Hudsons, Celtics, Caledonians, Bronx Rangers, and Hollywood Inn teams. While the members of the Executive Committee were not ready to announce the names of any of the players who are likely to be selected before Monday, they were favorably impressed with the work of Donald, Armstrong, Gordon, O'Gorman, Seldon, and Tate, all of whom showed up remarkably well. Other players spoken of who will likely be selected are Campbell of the Paterson Rangers, Neill of the Caledonians, and Anderson of Brooklyn. Line-up:

PILGRIMS WIN CLOSE GAME.

Beat the Fall River Team at Association Football by One Goal.

Special to The New York Times.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Oct. 14.—A great game of Association football was played this afternoon on the Bedford Street Athletic Grounds in this city in the presence of about 7,000 spectators. The Pilgrims of England met an all-Fall River team and won a highly exciting contest that was not decided until about five minutes before the final whistle blew. The good plays on either side were loudly applauded.

Fall River tied the tally after their opponents had scored the first goal. It was thirty-five minutes after the ball had been first put in play that the leather was landed between the uprights by Bryning. Then after a lot of hammering Cumming pelted the sphere beyond Sir Charles Kirkpatrick, tying the total.

Play was fast and furious for the next few minutes, and just before the whistle sounded for half time Dalton lifted the ball into the net, the visitors' goal custodian declaring that it was the neatest shot from centre that he has seen in this country.

After fifteen minutes' rest play was resumed, but it was apparent that the local men could not stand the strain. Fall River did well for the first fifteen minutes, but the ball then hovered near their goal for the greater part of the time. Eleven minutes more elapsed and Woodward sent the leather in past Healy for a tie, three each. The home team tried hard to stop any further score, but about five minutes before the contest ended Healy was coaxed out of his cage and Bryning got possession of the pigskin and headed it through, making what proved to be the decisive tally. Automobile Notes of Interest.

Nothing ever put on the market has made such a hit in automobiling as the Gabriel horn. These horns warn without startling or shocking one's nerves. They blow a full, strong blast from the exhaust of the gasoline engine and can be attached to a steam machine. They are operated either by foot lever or by touching the button on the steering wheel. The popularity of the horn is due very largely not alone to the musical sound, but to the fact that it can be put on with so little trouble. The factory is now turning out 150 horns a day, which are placed through the distributing agents, the Automobile Cover and Top Manufacturing Company, 148 West Fifty-sixth Street.

A neat booklet has just been published by the Maxwell-Briscoe Motor Company, giving interesting and statistical information about the different types of cars manufactured by the company. The Maxwell cars have jumped into high favor this past season, and they made an unusual record in the Glidden tour, five cars being entered and four finishing in excellent condition.

One who has been driving cars for many years says that he expects to see some powder or composition that when placed in kerosene will supply a fluid which can be used in place of gasoline for automobiles, which will, of course, be much more economical. The rather novel idea may give encouragement to those inventors who have been trying to build motors that would use kerosene or alcohol.

Tire troubles have caused many automobile races to be lost, and although the sharp turns on the Vanderbilt course presaged a lot of difficulties for the drivers, it is a matter of general satisfaction that American tires should have come through without trouble. Of the ten cars that started, only one had any trouble at all, and that was because the corner was taken too fast and the car skidded into a pole. Not even a puncture delayed the other cars.

GAS BOARD'S FIRST ACT HAS RAISED GAS PRICES

Has Allowed Auburn Companies to Kill Competition.

TOWN HAD 50-CENT GAS

And Promptly Upon the Absorption of a Smaller Concern the Rate Went Up to $1.25.

The State Gas Commission, which was the outgrowth of the sentiment in New York City for an eighty-cent gas bill, has rendered its first decision. From that decision the people of the City of New York probably may get an idea of what they have to expect from the commission in the matter of getting relief from the Consolidated Gas Company.

The Eighty-Cent Gas bill was killed in the Legislature and the State Gas Commission came as a substitute. The Republican leaders contended when the State Gas Commission bill went through that the legislation would serve the people quite as well as the passage of an Eighty-Cent Gas bill would have done. Moreover, they said that, as the State Gas Commission would have jurisdiction over the entire State, the people of the entire State, and not alone the people of New York City, would be benefited.

Section 11 of the act creating the State Gas Commission provides that "the commission may inquire as to the necessity of the service to be furnished by such corporation (i. e., a corporation applying for a certificate of authority to transact business) and as to the intention and good faith of the corporation and its officers. It further provides that if satisfied that the territory within which such corporation proposes to operate is already supplied with an ample and well-constructed system, furnishing the service which such corporation proposes to furnish, at a fair and reasonable rate, such commission may refuse to grant its certificate of authority."

It was that clause which aroused the opposition of the Citizens' Union and other civic bodies of New York. They said that the State Gas Commission bill was in the interest of the gas companies rather than the people, and that its effect would be to make existing monopoly more secure. At the hearing before Gov. Higgins it was shown that the sole advocate of the measure was John Wilkie, representing the Empire State Gas Association, an organization which embraces most of the gas companies of the State. Mr. Wilkie very frankly admitted that he thought the legislation would redound to the benefit of the gas companies, as it would relieve them from the necessity of doing business with the Common Councils of the municipalities of the State. The companies would be treated much more fairly by a State Gas Commission, Mr. Wilkie thought, than they had been by Boards of Aldermen.

Gov. Higgins signed the bill and later appointed as the three members of the commission Frederic E. Gunnison, John C. Davies, and Lucian L. Shedden.

The first application made to the commission was that of the Auburn Gas Company to increase its capital stock from $500,000 to $750,000 so that it might acquire the Citizens' Light and Power Company.

Auburn's Fifty-Cent Service.

While the Eighty Cent Gas bill was before the Senate Finance Committee, Charles F. Matthewson, counsel for the Consolidated Gas Company, contended that gas could not be manufactured and sold at a profit for 80 cents. Thereupon Senator Wilcox of Auburn cited the fact that it was being sold in the so-called competitive district of Auburn for 50 cents, and had been sold at that price for years.

Hearings on the application of the Auburn Gas Company to increase its capital stock $250,000 to purchase the Citizens' Light and Power Company's plant and thereby do away with competition in lighting in that city were held by the State Commission at Albany on Aug. 22 and Sept. 12.

The testimony showed that the Citizens' Company had got a franchise from the City of Auburn in 1901, although the Auburn Company had been operating for a period of many years. The charter of the Citizens' Company allowed it to charge $1.25 per thousand cubic feet for gas, with a reduction for prompt payment, bringing the charge down to $1.13. The Citizens' Company laid some fourteen miles of mains in Auburn, as against forty miles already in existence and owned by the Auburn Gas Company. The mains of the two companies paralleled each other.

The Citizens' Company started in by making a price of $1. The Auburn Gas Company met that price by a reduction to 75 cents. The Citizens' Company then reduced the price to 50 cents. A like reduction was made by the Auburn Company. The price charged by the two companies has remained 50 cents ever since. In that part of the city outside of the competitive district the price charged by the Auburn Gas Company was $1.50 per thousand cubic feet.

Consolidation All Arranged.

The arrangements for the sale of the Citizens' Light and Power Company's plant to the Auburn Gas Company had been perfected before the application was made to the Gas Commission to permit an increase in the capital stock of the Auburn Gas Company. At the hearing Mayor Thomas M. Osborne of Auburn and City Attorney J. Henry Kerr opposed the application. Lansing G. Hoskins appeared for the petitioners.

Mr. Hoskins contended that the two companies were losing about $75,000 a year as the result of their competition, and that it was only a question of time when they would both become bankrupt unless relief was afforded.

Mayor Osborne and City Attorney Kerr took the position that the price asked for the Citizens Company's plant was excessive, and that the citizens of Auburn should be protected from paying dividends on watered stock. Two experts selected by the Mayor appeared before the commission at the final hearing and testified to the value of the Citizens Company's plant. One valued the property, exclusive of the good-will, at $150,000 and the other at $160,000. They were forced to make their estimates without seeing the plant, that privilege having been denied by officers of the company. The petitioners' expert fixed the value of the Citizen's plant at $300,000.

On Oct. 2 the commission issued an order allowing the Auburn Gas Company to issue $100,000 worth of stock to complete the purchase of the other plant.

Gas Costs 27 Cents Per 1,000 Feet.

What Mayor Osborne thought of the action of the State Commission was made known in a message which he sent to the Common Council Tuesday night. The Mayor said:

I regret to say that the views of the city's rights which the City Attorney and I had the honor to lay before the Commission were only in part sustained. We took the ground that any increase of the capital stock of the Auburn Gas Company for the purpose of buying out the Citizens' Company was unwarranted and unjust unless it was for the express purpose of property necessary to carry on their business of producing gas to sell to the people of Auburn.

That if the gas company wanted to buy out the Citizens' Company they could do so with some of the stock already issued. We brought to the attention of the commission that while only $84,000 cash was invested in the original company and its value was not more than $280,000 at the time of the sale to the present company, that the Auburn Gas Company had already issued $500,000 stock and $300,000 of bonds, and were planning for $500,000 bonds and asking to issue $250,000 more stock, making a total of $1,350,000 of securities issued on a property worth at the most $250,000, except for the franchise, the profits on which belong morally to the city.

The city was successful in reducing the amount of stock to be issued from $250,000 to $100,000.

Since this action of the commission the Auburn Gas Company has given notice of an increase in gas rates, in what is known as the competitive district, to $1.25 net.

It is claimed by the gas company that this is not excessive, but if it be true, as is reported, that the gas company buys its gas for 27 cents from the Geneva Fuel Company it would seem as though the price to the consumer should be below $1.25.

Moreover, in the franchise granted to the Citizens' Company, to which rights and responsibilities the gas company now succeeds, the price of gas is definitely fixed at $1.13 net and $1 when used for fuel or cooking purposes. In my judgment steps should be taken at once to bring this question before the Gas Commission—to force the gas company to abide by the terms of the franchise they have assumed.

I should suggest, if this movement fails, that the question of cancellation of the Citizens' franchise be seriously considered. After giving the price of gas as above stated the franchise reads: "Any charge made in excess of these rates shall at the option of the Common Council void this franchise, and terminate and end all rights and privileges hereunder."

It would seem to give ample ground for terminating a franchise which has been from the first a stumbling block in the way of establishing proper relations between the city and the public lighting corporations.

Promptly Raised the Price.

At the time that the Auburn Gas Company announced the increased rate in the competitive district from 50 cents to $1.25 net it also announced a decrease in the non-competitive district from $1.50 to $1.25. That is, it made a flat rate of $1.25 for the entire city.

As a result of the State Gas Commission's decision, the Consolidated Gas Company of Auburn gave the residents along twenty-six miles of its mains a reduction of 25 cents, and exacted from those along fourteen miles of its mains 75 cents a thousand cubic feet more than they had been paying. It appears, therefore, that the gas company has the State Gas Commission to thank for allowing it to kill competition, to water its stock, and substantially increase its earning.

PRINCETON FOR REFORM.

The President Congratulated for Taking a Hand in Football.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, Oct. 14.—The sentiments of all Princeton graduates and students are voiced in The Alumni Weekly, which congratulates President Roosevelt on tackling the job of cleaning up college athletics. The Weekly wishes him the same success in the football field that he has achieved as a peacemaker. The article says:

"To most every one but a few of those entangled in the dominant theory and practice of the game itself it has been plain for some time that, unless football is radically reformed, this great American college sport is doomed.

"The evils of the present form and practice of football are known by every one who has followed the games in recent years and whose vision is not obscured by that intimate participation which makes politicians, for instance, proverbially blind to the signs of the times, heedfully deaf to a popular demand, and blissfully ignorant of an impending crisis. A more fatal indictment of the recent development of the game is not needed to enforce the demand for reform than the following remarks from The Daily Princetonian, the undergraduate paper:

"'Football as played among the colleges to-day has reached a stage where it is losing its element of sport and is becoming work of the hardest kind. The men on the squad are willing and determined to bend all their energies to make this work count for success.'

"In other words it is not play. It is work. Football is not sport, it is business. The players do not enjoy the game. They play from a sense of duty, from devotion to their Alma Mater."

CLERK SHOT BY COMPANION.

Saloon Keeper Lent the Pistol Used—Victim Will Die.

Edward Keenan, a clerk, who lives with his sister in Williamsburg, was shot and fatally wounded yesterday afternoon in the saloon of George Albraitis, 203 Bedford Avenue. The shooting was done by Henry Webb, a glass cutter.

The men, who were good friends, entered the saloon together and were talking in front of the bar, when Webb turned to the proprietor of the place and said to him:

"Let me have your revolver, Albraitis."

Albraitis took a revolver from a drawer behind the bar and handed it to Webb without asking any questions. As soon as Webb got possession of the weapon he turned to Keenan and said: "I am going to shoot you."

Before Keenan realized his danger Webb discharged the revolver. The bullet entered on the right side of the nose, and, taking an upward course, lodged in the brain. Keenan fell, and Webb ran from the saloon.

Special Policeman William Harron and Police Capt. Pinkerton of the Bedford Avenue Station stopped Webb and took him back to the saloon, where they found Keenan, unconscious. A call was sent to the Williamsburg Hospital, and an ambulance hurried the wounded man to the institution.

Webb refused to make any statement. He was locked up, as was the saloon keeper, who was charged with being an accessory to the shooting. Webb has a wife and five children in England.

THOUGHT IT WAS A RIOT.

Police Reserves Out to Stop the Annual Rush of Bellevue Medical Students.

The first and second year men in the University and Bellevue Hospital Medical College met in the first clash of the season yesterday afternoon. These "rushes" have come to be annual affairs, and are usually confined to the leeture room in which they begin. Yesterday, however, the war was carried into East Twenty-sixth Street, and when Dr. Armstrong, Superintendent of Bellevue Hospital, came along he thought a riot was in progress and summoned Policeman Quinn from the hospital grounds.

Quinn soon found himself beneath a mass of struggling students. As soon as he could extricate himself he sent in a call for the reserves of the East Twenty-second Street Station, and Henry Benz, Max Seigsistein, and Nathan Frank were arrested. The chief damage was to a hundred or more hats, the remains of which littered the street and served for a blaze after the struggle was stopped.

MORE LAWYERS CROOKED THAN UNION MEN---JEROME

The District Attorney Under Fire at a Labor Meeting.

ANSWERS POINTED QUESTIONS

And Tells Why He Kept After Sam Parks—He Says There's a Deal Between Odell and Murphy.

For two hours and a half last evening District Attorney Jerome stood on the platform in Groll's Hall, at 147 East Fifty-third Street, facing about a hundred walking delegates and business representatives sent there by nearly two-score trades unions to ascertain the District Attorney's attitude toward organized labor. While from the beginning it was clear that many of those present were friendly to him, he had, nevertheless, to meet many questions put with apparent desire to trip him up.

The place is one of the best-known headquarters of organized labor in the city, and became famous in the days of Sam Parks and his "Entertainment Committee." President Robert P. Davis of the Board of Walking Delegates of the Associated Building Trades presided.

It was said that the object of the meeting was to have the District Attorney point out the labor crooks. This phrase appeared in the letter of invitation sent Mr. Jerome, but the Secretary read also his acceptance, in which he declared that, howsver willing to come, he would not come for any such purpose.

The Chairman introduced the District Attorney with a dozen words, simple and direct. A brief round of applause greeted Mr. Jerome as he rose to begin.

Jerome Says He Has Been Misunderstood.

"No man was ever more misunderstood than I have been by the laboring men of this city," he began. "That's neither their fault nor mine. The reason of it is that we have had to speak at arm's length instead of coming together and thrashing it out man fashion. I believe there is no man worthy of his salt that I cannot get along with if we have a chance to talk the matter over between us.

"It is quite widely believed that I stand antagonistic to organized labor. If I did I should come here to-night and tell you so straight out. The difference between us will come out when you begin to ask questions, I suppose. Where we agree I will tell you right now. You are organized for three principal purposes: To secure a standard day, a standard wage, and collective bargaining. That's not the Socialistic end of the labor movement, but its strict business end. And there I am with you. Business is not fun. It is war. The employer wants to get out of you the most he can for the least pay. You want to get out of him the most you can for the least work. That's the essence of the difference between capital and labor. You have gained much of what you want through organization. And whenever you lost what you fought for, it was through some traitor in your own camp who was not true to you but sold you out to the other side.

More Crooked Lawyers Than Laborers

"You have asked me to tell you about that sort of men. What the deuce could I know on that subject that you do not know ten times better? And in regard to crookedness I can give you a pretty clean bill of health. There are thousands of laboringmen to each lawyer in this city—and I speak of lawyers only because the legal profession is my own—yet the actual number of men representing labor who are accused of crime falls much short of the number of lawyers so charged. I have spoken bitterly at times, but I did so because I believed what I said was the truth—and I never apologize for a word I believe to be true.

"Here is a body of men, and I am a man. If you have anything against me, or anything you want to know, put it up, and put it to me hard."

Victor Buhr of the Amalgamated Painters started the questions. All referred in one way or another to the scandal connected with the holding up of the Union Club's new building in 1902—a scandal that was directly responsible for the enactment of the Prince law, which makes the bribing of a walking delegate a crime the same as the bribing of a public official. Names and dates were mentioned in connection with the allegations.

"So you assert a walking delegate got a part of that money the employers put up?" Buhr concluded.

"I assert nothing of the kind," retorted Mr. Jerome sharply. "I am here to deal fairly with everybody. All I have said is that this man's name was one of several mentioned to me at the time and personally I have no faith in him." [Applause.]

Says "Jimmy" is a Labor Fakir.

"Do you know Jimmy So-and-So?" asked another delegate timidly.

"Do I know Jimmy?" repeated Mr. Jerome. "Well, well—if there ever was a labor fakir, he's one. Jimmy is always delivering somebody or other to some political organization."

This was the hit of the evening. At last a slow-spoken Teuton got up and said:

"Well, will you promise to be as fair to the employes in the future as you are to the employers?"

"Wouldn't it be awfully cheap of me to say yes?" Mr. Jerome burst out. "I am not here to make political capital, but to answer questions and settle differences between us. And if you cannot read a man when you see him; if you cannot see that I am trying to fulfill a hard task honestly under great difficulties—then my telling you so will never convince you."

John Mulaney of the Asbestos Workers got hold of Mr. Jerome next and began to propound questions. A couple of times the teeth of the District Attorney showed white between drawn lips, and finally he said pointedly:

"I have to remember, if you don't, that I am your guest."

The Parks Case.

John Mulaney went on all the same, getting back to Sam Parks time and again, and asking at last point blank why the District Attorney had ben so much "down" on the late business representative of the Housesmiths.

"Because he took thousands of men out of their work and kept them out," roared Mr. Jerome in reply, shaking his fist at the questioner. "Because he took them out not for their own good, but for the sake of graft. Because I had strong, big, white men come to my office night after night, as if they were afraid, to tell me with tears that their wives and their children were starving, and that that fellow would not let them work."

Once more he was cheered wildly. And John Mulaney said in a subdued way:

"I've got the impression to-night that you are a truthful man."

"And if I could see your face better I might return the compliment," Mr. Jerome replied.

A dozen delegates proposed to come to Mr. Jerome's office with cases and were told that they would be welcome. Then the meeting broke up. A little while later Mr. Jerome was seen at a table in the harroom in the building with Delegate Mulaney.

Asked about the local situation yesterday, Mr. Jerome said:

"It ought to be patent to every voter by this time that there has been a deal between Murphy and Odell, just as at one time there was a deal between Platt and Croker. Neither of them could see his way to nominate me. They have understood each other. We have seen the results of the Platt-Croker deal. Now we are about to see the results of the Odell-Murphy deal."

WOMAN RODE ON THE COAL.

Men Traveled on Engine's Cowcatcher to Get to the Race.

A crowd infinitely larger than was expected went to the Vanderbilt Cup races yesterday. The four long special trains that the Long Island Railroad had thought sufficient to carry all who would leave the city before daylight to be at the start were entirely inadequate to cope with the situation. The four trains, each made up of fourteen long coaches, were supplemented by the usual newspaper trains.

The waiting crowd thronged into the trains, quickly filling seats, aisles, and platforms, and then those who could not find a footing on the steps of the cars made for the forward end of the train and swarmed upon the engine and tender, taking no account of the soot and dirt. One young woman who had, with many others, reached the station at 2 A. M., owing to an unfortunate mistake made by a Brooklyn newspaper regarding the time of starting, climbed upon the cowcatcher, saying she intended seeing the start at all hazards.

But there the railroad men interfered, preventing her from riding upon the seat usually reserved for tramps. Room was found for her on the coal, a newspaper being folded for her to sit upon. Some young men, however, not to be outdone in foolhardiness by the girl, jumped upon the cowcatcher as the train pulled out and rode thereon to Mineola. The conductors could not begin to collect all the fares. Hundreds rode free because the press was so great that no man could make his way through it.

As even standing room was at a premium in the hotels, the farmhouses for miles about the course were filled. There was not one house whose owner was willing to give up his privacy but had strangers sleeping upon sofas. Nassau County has never before known such a throng.

One of the interesting things enjoyed on the side by many of the racegoers was such a variety of gambling devices as little Nassau had never before even heard of.

Every constable and Deputy Sheriff in the county and a large force of special officers were working under the direction of Sheriff Gildersleeve to prevent any one from being injured by the racing cars. No one paid any attention to affairs outside the roped-in inclosure—save the gamblers and the lambs. Money won on Hemery was staked on an elusive bit of sponge beneath a shell where developments proved it was not. Sad-faced lambs bleated out their misery as, shorn, they made their way to the railway station. Some might have had to walk home had it not been that the trains were so crowded that the conductors could not collect all the fares. The shorn lambs saw to it, for the most part, that the uncollected fares included their own.

When Lytle ran down a large Newfoundland dog at Krug's corner on the second lap, there was a second tense with expectation. Every one thought to see Lytle's machine swerve and capsize. Lytle clung steadily to the wheel, however, while for a fraction of a second the ear wavered in its mile-a-minute flight, he controlled it and passed the danger. The dog is no more.

COLER HITS AT THE MAYOR.

Can't See His Way Clear to Support "the Lobby," He Says.

Bird S. Coler, candidate for Borough President on the Municipal Ownership ticket in Brooklyn, gave out a statement yesterday in which he sharply criticised Mayor McClellan and Charles F. Murphy for their attitude toward Senator P. H. McCarren.

"I am going to run for Borough President for the same reason that Samuel J. Tilden ran for member of the Assembly," he said. "The people must realize that the power of granting franchises has been placed in the Board of Estimate, and McCarren is endeavoring to put his man on guard so that the franchises will be properly handled for his friends.

"Every one knows that McCarren is at the head of the insurance lobby in the Legislature, and the ring that got so much money from these corporations.

"I went into the fight against McCarren at the request of Mayor McClellan and his leader, Mr. Murphy. They said they were opposed to McCarren's methods and wanted him put out of business. Only a short time ago the Mayor made a personal settlement with McCarren as the head of the lobby, and placed himself among its adherents. I cannot see my way clear to support him and to help put the control of the city into the hands of the men whom Mr. Hughes is exposing so thoroughly."

Elder Boy Goes to Father—Major Will Not Press Co-respondents.

WOOSTER, Ohio, Oct. 14.—Judge Eason to-day decided that "Tiddles," the youngest child of the Taggarts, should be left in the care of his mother at Wooster. The elder boy may go with his father, who is at the Columbus Barracks. Judge Eason added that both children would remain under jurisdiction of the court. Major Taggart said to-day:

"Mrs. Taggart is free now to do as she wishes. I have no disposition to press charges against anybody. I want to say that Judge Smyser is responsible for the disclosures made concerning Gen. Miner and Lieut. Fortescue. I offered a compromise, and he refused."

Judge Smyser, attorney for Mrs. Taggart, served notice this afternoon that he would file a motion next Tuesday in his client's behalf for retrial.

FREIGHT ON CHICAGO SUBWAY.

Connection Between Railroad and Underground Way Completed.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—The first actual connection between a Chicago railroad and the Chicago Subway was made yesterday, when the shafts from the bore to the tracks of the Chicago and Alton Road at Vanburen Street were opened. Several carloads of coal were dropped down and sent to a downtown business house.

Five shafts connect the railroad with the Subway, and will be used for coal traffic. The Alton brings from 75 to 100 carloads of Illinois bituminous coal daily, and all intended for the downtown district will be delivered through the tunnel.

MINERS BEYOND RESCUE.

No Hope of Saving Six Men Shut in Burning Mine.

FREDERICKTOWN, Penn., Oct. 14.—The six miners entombed in the Clyde mine yesterday as a result of a fire-damp explosion have not been rescued. Parties worked in short shifts all night, but the dense smoke, despite the fans, made progress slow.

The men are 1,500 feet from the pit mouth and no hope of reaching them alive is entertained. Efforts are being made to reach the men by walling off the burning portion of the mine.

HEARST MEN ACCUSED OF PLAYING AT BOSSISM

COUNTY NOMINATIONS WAIT

A Committee of Three Will Get to Work on Them Despite Pleas to Work in the Open.

The County Convention of the Municipal Ownership League at the Hoffman House adjourned sine die at midnight without making nominations. After a lively dispute, which for a time threatened to break up the convention, the task of selecting candidates for the county and borough offices in Manhattan was left to a committee of three which was instructed to confer with the Executive Committee with full powers to make up the ticket.

This determination was reached after much wrangling in which some of the appointed delegates made charges that after denouncing boss rule in other organizations, the powers that be in the Municipal Ownership League were trying to defeat the will of the people by holding a "snap" convention with everything cut and dried.

The trouble in the convention was due, in the first place, to the fact that Municipal Ownership among its following has a great many more persons who aspire to hold office than there are offices to bestow. Especially is this true in regard to Coroners. A large percentage of the delegates at the convention is made up of M. Ds., and nearly every one of these is anxious to become a Coroner. There are said to be fifty candidates in this field for that office alone.

The convention was not called to order until well after 10 o'clock. Then Timothy F. Driscoll, a member of the Executive Committee, was elected its permanent Chairman by acclamation and James F. Donegan was made Secretary. The session had not been on more than five minutes before there was a row.

When everybody in the room was expecting to hear the Chairman call for nomination of candidates, Joseph W. Cody, a delegate from the Eighteenth Assembly District, got up and moved that a committee of the convention be appointed to confer with the Executive Committee and select the candidates.

Chairman Driscoll was just getting ready to call for a vote on the motion when a pale young man arose and declared that in a Democratic convention all the delegates ought to have a say in the selection of candidates. He proposed that the entire County Committee do the work.

Coroner O'Gorman of the Bronx, who is leader of the Hearst forces in that borough, and an important factor in the campaign work, was on his feet in an instant to oppose the motion on the ground that the work could be done quicker if a sub-committee was appointed for the purpose.

A dozen delegates jumped up at the same time, all with different motions to offer. Chairman Driscoll finally recognized James Henchy, a delegate from the Twenty-fourth Assembly District.

"It was the outpouring of the people at the Carnegie Hall convention that made us determine to select candidates for county and borough offices," Henchy said. "Now I demand that the candidates be nominated by the people. We, the delegates, are the people, and represent that convention, and we are going to do the work or know the reason why. There is not going to be anything done behind closed doors in this convention."

Coroner O'Gorman pleaded for the smaller committee, urging that haste was necessary if the League was to nominate a ticket at all. He was quite sure that there was every disposition on the part of the Executive Committee to consider the will of the people in making its nominations.

"That's not so," shouted Delegate Henchy. "I know that the candidates for every office on the ticket from top to bottom have been selected. We have denounced bosses and bossism in Tammany Hall and in the Republican Party and now you propose to hold a snap convention here."

The delegate pounded the speaker's desk with his fist and then shot it at Coroner O'Gorman.

"There is no such intention," declared Chairman Driscoll. "You are out of order."

"I say there is, and I know it," retorted Henchy. "I do know it. The people will not stand for any star-chamber selection of candidates. Let the nominations be made in the open."

Again there was turmoil. Some delegates shouted to Henchy to sit down; others shouted in approval. Finally the motion of Delegate Cody prevailed, and he, with Coroner O'Gorman and Secretary Donegan of the convention, was appointed to confer with the Executive Committee.

A recess was then taken. The delegates were ordered to write the names of their candidates on slips of paper, which were carried into the committee room. Every delegate sent in one or more suggestions.

For District Attorney the names included those of John De Witt Warner and Clarence J. Shearn, Mr. Hearst's counsel, as well as that of Jerome. Thomas F. F. Gilleran and Joseph W. Cody both aspire to become Presidents of the Borough of Manhattan. J. Fairfax McLaughlin will be nominated for the same office in the Bronx.

Just before midnight Coroner O'Gorman announced that the committee would not finish selecting the candidates until some time to-day, and moved that full power be bestowed on it to make up the slate without reporting back to the convention.

"The fact is," said the Coroner, "we have been swamped by the number of candidates. It is our disposition to take care of those who have been in this movement from the beginning, and to whom is due the success of the Carnegie Hall convention, but this afternoon outsiders have been butting in with such great power behind them as to impress the Executive Committee."

There were many Republicans at the Hearst headquarters yesterday. They came in twos and threes and offered their services as speakers. Some of them declared that they were members of the District Committees.

PRESIDENT TO THE CZAR.

Recalls That He Favored a Second Hague Conference Long Ago.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The State Department to-day made public the invitation by the Russian Government to a second conference at The Hague and the President's response.

These take the shape of two memoranda, one dated Sept. 13, being an unsigned memorandum delivered by Baron Rosen to the President at Oyster Bay, and the other a memorandum dated Oct. 12, also unsigned, delivered by the President to Baron Rosen in Washington.

The first memorandum is a mere recital of the opportuneness of another conference with the promise to submit a detailed programme by Russia when the congress meets. The President's memorandum is a hearty acceptance of the invitation, and directs attention to the fact that his previous circulars to the powers appear to be precisely in line with the Russian papers. The last memorandum was delivered to Baron Rosen Thursday night for transmission to St. Petersburg.

SUES TO CLOSE A BANK.

Ohio Attorney General Would Annul Cleveland Institution's Charter.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Oct. 14.—Attorney General Wade H. Ellis to-day began quo warranto proceedings in the Circuit Court against the Indemnity Savings and Loan Company of this city, praying that it be ousted from its corporate rights.

He charges that the company has committed and omitted acts which amount to a surrender of its corporate rights and privileges. The last statement of the company, issued Dec. 31, 1904, showed its assets to be $1,486,482; deposits, $682,614; capital stock, $765,196. The President is H. R. Sanborn.

A. T. Brewer, attorney for the bank, said that all depositors could be paid in full, while the stockholders could lose not to exceed 10 per cent. of their investment. He also declared that the bank was perfectly solvent and that no State law had been violated.

NEW TARTAR-ARMENIAN WAR.

Eleven Villages Already Destroyed in Elizabethpol District.

ELIZABETHPOL, Russia, Oct. 14.—Hostilities have broken out between Tartars and Armenians in the surrounding districts and bands of them are firing on each other in villages.

Two Armenian and nine Tartar villages have already been destroyed.

French Doctors Win Their Strike.

BORDEAUX, Oct. 14.—The doctors in the hospitals here who struck Oct. 7 will resume their duties on Monday, the Directorates of the institutions having granted their demands.

MISS SIEBERT MAY DIE OF AUTO INJURIES

The Actress in a Hospital with Her Skull Broken.

THE CHAUFFEUR IN JAIL.

Machine on the Way to the Cup Race Was Going Fifty Miles an Hour in Thirty-third Street.

Blanche Siebert, the actress, and Vi Brunner, who were injured in the automobile smash at Thirty-third Street and Fourth Avenue early yesterday morning, are not expected to live. Miss Siebert, who is in Bellevue, sustained a fracture of the skull and severe contusions, while Miss Brunner, a stenographer, living at 215 West Thirty-fourth Street, has concussion of the brain. Miss Brunner is at the New York Hospital.

Charles Gelhaus, the chauffeur, was arraigned in Jefferson Market and held without bail on a charge of intoxication and criminal negligence.

Others who were injured in the accident were Charles Splitdorf, an inventor of automobile improvements and a friend of Edward Hubbell of Toledo, Ohio, and Miss Lillian Harris, who lives at the Criterion. Miss Harris and Splitdorf, who also lives at the Criterion, are confined to their rooms at the hotel, whence the party had started for the Vanderbilt Cup race. Hubbell, it was said at the hotel, had not returned to his room, and it was not known where he had gone after the smash.

The desk clerk said the patients could not be seen. Miss Siebert, he said, had been a guest at the Criterion for some time. Miss E. Lloyd of 215 West Thirty-fourth Street, who was with Miss Brunner in the party, was reported resting easy. She suffered more shock than bodily injury.

Roundsman Cory, who had charge of the patrol when the accident occurred, said yesterday:

"I don't think that Gelhaus made any mistake about what street he was on. He was just muddled with drink. It is usual for chauffeurs to avoid Thirty-fourth Street, unless they are going to

"The machine was a forty-horse power touring car, and at the time of the accident was going at full speed. I have ascertained that its limit was fifty miles an hour. One of my men saw it go around the Thirty-third Street corner from the Waldorf. A vehicle is not to be blocked in the early hours of the evening, but he would have had a clear run at that hour of the morning.

"The chauffeur took Thirty-third Street as a matter of habit. The fact that there is an eighteen-inch granite coping set with one-inch rails and illuminated by an arc light right above the coping is evidence of the condition of the chauffeur, at least.

Broadway. The occupants were making a disturbance. He shouted to them to slow up, and they laughed at him."

Policeman O'Brien, who saw the accident, said that the machine shot out of Thirty-third Street like a flash, struck the coping head on, carried away the heavy one-inch railing and plunged thirty feet in the air, landing on its front wheels on the north-bound tracks. Miss Siebert and Miss Brunner were thrown out. Splitdorf, who had been hanging on the outside edge of the machine, owing to its crowded condition, was raked off by the railings on the parapet.

Late in the afternoon, James Rooney, who has a garage at 142 West Fifty-first Street, went to the West Thirtieth Street Station and asked permission to remove the wreck of the machine. He said that Gelhaus owned the machine, but lodged it at his garage.

Daniel Guerin Dies of His Injuries.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, Oct. 14.—Daniel Guerin of 309 West Sixty-eighth Street, New York, who was injured in Hilton on Tuesday by falling from an automobile, died last night in the Memorial Hospital. Guerin's skull was fractured in two places and the doctor's marveled that he did not die instantly. Guerin was in the iron business in Manhattan. The body was taken home this afternoon.

BREAKING PARTY LINES IN THE OHIO CAMPAIGN

Local Issues and Foraker's Stand Help to Make Uncertainty.

OUTCRY AGAINST BOSSISM

Chairman Dick and His Speakers Driven to Defend Cox — Folk to Aid Pattison.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 14.—For the first time in the history of very many years party lines are disappearing in an Ohio campaign. So many and varied are the influences at work to break up the old alignments that even Republican managers now admit the outcome on election day is a matter of doubt.

Senator Dick, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, has appealed to a number of Cabinet members to come into the State and help him, but there has been no response outside of the projected visit of Secretary Taft.

National issues, which for many campaigns have dominated the State elections, are practically disregarded this Fall. Senator Dick opened the campaign by the announcement that the tariff would be the issue. But the large following he discovered for the President's policy of tariff revision has put a damper on that issue.

The pronounced opposition of Senator Foraker to the rate law plan of the Roosevelt Administration, in the Senator's speech opening the campaign at Bellefontaine, has been seized upon by the Democrats who indorsed tariff revision and freight rate legislation in their platform. Both these issues have proved popular with the people generally.

Gov. Herrick, whom the Republicans renominated, is opposed by the anti-saloon league and church people all over the State for his stand on the Brannock Local Option bill, forcing its modification by threat of a veto. He is as bitterly opposed by horsemen throughout the State, because he vetoed a bill providing for pool selling at Ohio tracks. He is opposed by farmers in a certain portion of Ohio because he vetoed an appropriation for the agricultural station, and by farmers in another section because he did not veto certain bills.

He is the first Governor in Ohio to have the veto power, and its use has caused him no end of trouble. The anti-saloon fight alone would not defeat Gov. Herrick. All the other opposition added to that would not beat him were it not for the outcry raised against the bossism of George B. Cox of Cincinnati.

The great moral wave that has revolutionized Missouri and Wisconsin and reached to Philadelphia began to be felt in Ohio two years ago, when two Cleveland newspapers began attacks on Cox. When Herrick was named for a second term, after Cox had announced that he was for him, the two newspapers reopened their batteries and have been hard at it ever since.

At first the Republican leaders ignored the attack. They did not mention Cox in their speeches. Neither he nor any of his men attended the Republican campaign opening. But the cry against "bossism" grew louder, and this week Senator Dick, Gov. Herrick, and other speakers have been forced to defend Cox from the platform, declaring that he is a good Republican and that he is no more of a boss than Mayor Johnson of Cleveland.

One of the latest to come out against Cox is ex-Lieut. Gov. Jones, who says he will not aid Herrick and declares that he is getting tired of ready-made tickets. In several counties so rabid is the feeling against the so-called Cox-Dick-Herrick machine that County Committees have requested that Herrick be kept out of their ballotwicks, because it may injure the local tickets. To all such requests the reply has gone back that Republicans must stand or fall together; if the State ticket is defeated, the local tickets will go with it.

Gov. Herrick vigorously denies that he has been or is at any time bossed by any one, but there is a demand that the Republicans bring more convincing arguments to bear on the voters. So far personalities have not appeared in the campaign except the attacks on Cox. Both Herrick and Pattison have been treating each other with courtesy and limiting their discussion to principles. They have frequently met at county fairs. Both know how to mix with the people and make friends.

It is said that Gov. Folk of Missouri will make a tour of the State in aid of the Democratic nominee, John M. Pattison, in a special train toward the end of the campaign. Mayor Johnson will help some with auto tours throughout Northern Ohio, but he has a lively Mayoralty campaign on his hands.

SAVED HER DOG FROM TRAIN.

Little Girl Clung to Pet in Wild Ride on Engine's Pilot.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—Nine-year-old Anna Lutz of Evanston was carried three miles on the pilot of a locomotive last night, after leaping in front of the train and saving her small collie dog, Governor, which she carried through her dangerous ride. Neither the girl nor the dog was injured.

The girl was crossing the Chicago and Northwestern Railway tracks, with Governor close at her heels. The dog stopped on the northbound track in the path of the engine, which was moving slowly out of the Evanston yards. Anna turned and called to the dog, but it did not heed.

She leaped in the path of the train and seized her pet by the collar, to be herself struck and gathered up by the pilot. The girl had approached the tracks from the left side, and the engineer, gazing from the right, did not see her.

The child calmly told the story of her adventure to the trainmen, who discovered her when the train was switched, just south of Winnetka, to allow a passenger train to pass.

TRAGEDY OF CANOE PARTY.

Only Two of Six Surveyors Saved on Winnipeg River.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, Oct. 14.—Four men belonging to a party of six Grand Trunk Pacific surveyors were drowned yesterday in Winnipeg River, fifteen miles from Kenera, by the upsetting of a canoe.

When the boat turned over, Anton Larensen, a powerful swimmer, struck out for the shore. E. C. Moffat followed, but turned back. Fred Crooks and William Porter sank immediately. John Brown was pulled onto the back of the canoe, but fell off again and sank. Larensen finally threw up his hands and disappeared.

Albert Gibson and Moffat stuck to the frail bark, and after two hours of suffering in the icy and turbulent stream were washed ashore.

Mrs. Chase Declared a Suicide.

HAVERHILL, Mass., Oct. 14.—District Attorney Peters, after a conference here to-day with President Whitney of the Harvard Medical School and Chief of Police Harris of Swampscott, stated that Mrs. Jennie Phillips Chase, who died of asphyxiation at her home in Swampscott on Sept. 13, "unquestionably committed suicide." Unless relatives of Mrs. Chase desired to satisfy themselves as to the facts, he said, he could see no reason for holding an inquest.

RUN ON NEW ORLEANS BANK.

$1,250,000 Drawn from New York and Depositors Reassured.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 14.—For two days there has been a run on the Germania Savings Bank and Trust Company in this city, during which small depositors have drawn out about $500,000. It almost ceased this afternoon, however, when the institution announced that it would remain open day and night as long as depositors applied for payment.

The New Orleans Clearing House Committee issued a statement in this morning's papers declaring the bank absolutely safe, and saying that, after all depositors had been paid it would have $1,000,000 to divide among its stockholders. The leading bankers announced that they wound supply all money needed, and drafts were made on New York.

The run was precipitated by an afternoon newspaper which, three days ago, referred to "high finance" in insurance companies and then hinted that a certain New Orleans institution was being used by its officers for their private gain. It followed this with stories which pointed its charges at the Germania Bank. As a result the poorer people became panic-stricken.

While the run was on the stock of the bank was bid up $10 a share on the local stock market. Its assets are $8,139,985.

New York banks transferred yesterday to New Orleans through the Sub-Treasury $1,250,000 because of the run on the Germania Savings Bank. This is the largest amount that has been transferred through the Sub-Treasury on one day since the transfers to St. Louis two years ago when the banking institutions in that city were under considerable strain.

FIRE SWEEPS A COUNTY FAIR.

Panic as Grandstand Burns—Many Injured in Escaping.

BUCYRUS, Ohio, Oct. 14.—While the races were being run at the county fair this afternoon, the grand stand caught fire. In less than half an hour the entire fair was wiped out.

A panic followed the first announcement. Spectators rushed for the exit and soon blocked the only passage to safety. Excited women, children, and men leaped over the front of the stand upon the track, twelve feet, and many were injured.

Those who left the grand stand last were badly burned, as the big pine structure went like tinder. Within three minutes after the fire was discovered the stand was enveloped in flames. The fire was caught up by a stiff breeze and was driven across the grounds, communicating from building to building.

The Horticultural Hall went in a flash. The photographic art building and newspaper headquarters were destroyed. The school exhibit hall was badly damaged, and some of the stables were burned. The canvas used by the farm implement people was swept away, and flames from the building played upon an acre of implements, buggies, and windmills, destroying them. Women in charge of exhibits had scant time to escape.

ESCAPED ROBBER CAUGHT.

Grand Jury Investigating Two Jail Deliveries at Morristown.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Oct. 14.—Thomas Buckley, alias Burns, wanted in this county for breaking jail, was brought here to-day by Chief of Police Holloway and Deputy Sheriff Orr, from Cleveland, Ohio, where he was arrested.

Buckley, with Albert Jones, escaped from the county prison on June 4 while the Sheriff and his Deputy were at dinner. The prisoners filed off an iron bar of a window which faced the courtyard, and climbed a fence sixteen feet high.

As it was the second jail delivery within a week the Grand Jury which was then in session censured the Sheriff. When the Grand Jury which is now in session received its charge from Justice Garretson attention was called to the second jail delivery.

The jury is now making a vigorous investigation. Buckley was under a five years' sentence to State prison for highway robbery, and was to have been taken to Trenton on the day following his escape.

W. M. RICE LEFT $4,000,000.

Patrick's Victim Had $3,300,000 in Bonds and Personal Property.

The final appraisement of the estate of William M. Rice, who died on Sept. 23, 1900, and for whose death Albert T. Patrick was convicted and sentenced to death, was filed in the Surrogates' office yesterday.

The gross personal estate held by Mr. Rice in this State is estimated at $3,309,577, and the net personal estate comes to $2,520,080, after deducting several items, which include $114,234 for the expenses of the temporary administrator, appointed in place of Patrick, who was named as administrator under the will.

Among the items of the personal estate are bonds of the San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railroad valued at $200,540, 1,350 shares of Western Union Telegraph stock, $105,637; 119 bonds of the Houston and Texas Central Railroad, $131,792; 2,480 shares in the Galveston Wharf Company, $204,600; 431 bonds of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, $433,693, and 404 shares of stock in the same company, $281,070.

Mr. Rice left no real property in New York. His realty outside this State is valued at $1,065,000.

FENCE FOR ROCKEFELLER.

Barrier Twenty Miles Long to Shut Public from Tarrytown Estate.

TARRYTOWN, Oct. 14.—The estate of John D. Rockefeller here is to be closed to the public.

An iron fence, six feet high and twenty miles long, is now being erected under the supervision of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and it is believed here that he was the originator of the scheme.

Mr. Rockefeller hitherto has allowed the public to drive over his property, and it is said the privilege has been abused.

The border of the lawns skirting the roadways have been beaten down by careless drivers, and visitors have often stolen fruit from the orchards.

There is a public road running through the property, which will be fenced on on either side, and gates will be erected where the private roads of the estate run into it.

There are thirty miles of private roads on the estate, which comprises 6,000 acres.

SUICIDE IN A HOTEL.

Jersey Man Registered as George Hozen of Schwartzburg.

A man who registered at Trainor's Hotel, 1,291 Broadway, as George Hazen of Schwarzburg, N. J., committed suicide there sometime between 2 o'clock Saturday morning, when he arrived, and last night.

The man appeared to be about 40 years old and was fairly well dressed. He had stopped at the hotel before, and nothing was thought of it when he was not seen yesterday.

The door of his room was broken in just before midnight, and the man was found dead on the bed with a bullet wound in his right temple and a 22-calibre revolver in his right hand.

He had been dead several hours. The man left no letters, and had but 60 cents in his pockets.

SAVOY HOTEL
LONDON.

In May, 1904, the extensions and improvements to the Savoy Hotel were completed.

Never in the history of hotel life in any country has the appreciation of the public of the comfort and luxury provided for them been shown in a more substantial form. The best travellers from the Continent of Europe and America have pronounced the magnificent suites of rooms with bathrooms to be unrivalled—and their recommendation to friends has resulted in the large increase in business of 1904 over 1903 being greatly exceeded in the present year—thus showing that the more the public become familiar with the comforts and luxury of the hotel the greater is its popularity. The following figures show the increase in business during the London season:

MONTH.	Increase of Receipts of Hotel and Restaurant in 1904 over 1903.	Increase of Receipts of Hotel and Restaurant in 1905 over 1903.	Occupants of Apartments during month. 1903.	1904.	1905.
MAY.....	35 per cent.	69 per cent.	4,428	4,478	8,074
JUNE.....	49 " "	85 " "	4,695	6,033	10,131
JULY.....	50 " "	108 " "	2,779	5,921	9,681

18,807 more visitors patronized the Savoy Restaurant in May, June and July, 1905, than in the same months of 1903—and during the season space alone has prevented the entertainment of a greater number of guests who have desired to enjoy the finest cuisine in the world.

HUGE WAVE SWEPT FIVE FROM CAMPANIA'S DECKS

Ten Others Hurt When the Comber Boarded the Cunarder.

STEERAGE IN A PANIC

Crew, Passengers, and Doctors Prompt in Aiding the Injured—The Ship's Rough Voyage.

The giant wave which swept over the port side of the Cunarder Campania last Wednesday carried to a watery grave when it rolled back into the sea five of the liner's steerage passengers and injured ten of them seriously. That any of the passengers had been lost was not known until yesterday morning, when Capt. Warr, one of the oldest and best-known of the Cunard commanders, communicated the news to his New York office.

When Capt. Warr sent the news by wireless on Friday, he was still uncertain as to the number of steerage passengers unaccounted for, and it was only after many and repeated inspections of the steerage that it became known that five of the passengers, four of them young women, had been washed overboard.

The five who were lost were Margaret Cleary, Mary Cosgrove, Nella Ekberg, Elizabeth Grunadotter, and John Graham. Of the injured, seven of whom are in St. Vincent's Hospital and three in the hospital on Ellis Island, the condition of Agnes Karlsson, a young Swedish girl, is the most serious. Both of her thighs were broken, and both legs had to be amputated by the ship's doctors.

It was in the early afternoon that the giant wave boarded the Campania. Although the sky was clear, a wind, the velocity of which was variously estimated at from forty to seventy miles an hour, was blowing from the southwest. Great seas were running, some of them mountainous in size. Up to this time, however, none of the monster combers had inflicted any damage on the liner, and at least 100 of the Campania's 680 steerage passengers were on deck, watching the billows, that were to be seen on all sides, as the Campania plowed her way westward.

Suddenly, and before even a single officer realized what was impending, an avalanche of water struck the liner, aft of amidships on the port side. As the wave came over, it smashed the gangway openings in the railings as if they were so much glass. In less than a minute the deck was flooded to a depth of three feet. The water plunged back into the sea in a mighty roaring column, the steerage passengers being swept in all directions, while the five who were near the gangway openings that had been swept away were washed into the sea. Not one of them was seen again.

For at least three minutes after shipping the great sea, the Campania careened to an angle of nearly 40 degrees. The steerage passengers who were on deck when the wave came over were up to their waists in water, while the injured were floundering about everywhere, praying and shouting for help, grasping at stanchions or anything else they could find to keep from being swept into the ocean by the swirling torrent of water.

The passengers in the steerage thought the ship was sinking, and ran about screaming in terror and begging the officers and crew for life preservers. Capt. Warr was on the bridge, and immediately signaled to his officers to close all doors leading to the open decks, so that none of the panic-stricken passengers could get out and leap overboard.

True to the traditions of the line, the Campania's crew rushed immediately to the rescue of the steerage passengers. The men plunged into the water, which was still several feet deep on the main deck, and shouted to the people to be quiet, all the time getting about as fast as possible, dragging to safety those who were in danger of being washed overboard.

Dr. Francis Verdon, the Campania's doctor, was on the scene almost as quickly as the stewards and seamen, and was not long in finding out that he had more on his hands than any one man could do. Assisted by Dr. Neville Bradley of London, Dr. Carl B. Davis of Chicago, Dr. James Brady of Rochester, Dr. C. K. Fleming, and other physicians, he quickly set about examining the injured passengers.

Agnes Karlsson had been found by the stewards kneeling in the water and feebly clinging to a stanchion. The girl was praying and seeing the stewards begged them to help her. When she did not try to rise they went to her, and picking her up carried her into the grand companion way.

One of the steerage passengers who was saved by two of the Campania's sailors had $20,000 in his pockets. He said that he was traveling with a friend who was too poor to take cabin passage and had decided to come over in the steerage.

John Graham, the man who was washed overboard and lost, was a resident of Milwaukee, and was on his way home, accompanied by his wife. His wife was saved by one of the stewards. Mr. Graham had about $500 in his pockets at the time, all the money he had in the world. He leaves seven children in Milwaukee. The saloon passengers subscribed nearly $500 for the widow.

When the water had all poured back into the sea, the Campania was at least a mile beyond the point where the five passengers had been washed overboard. Tremendous seas were still running and a heavy wind was blowing, conditions that made an attempt at rescue out of the question.

The conduct of the cabin passengers after the panic was most creditable. They assisted the officers in attending to the steerage passengers, and finally a committee, headed by William Johnson of the Johnson Steamship Company of England and Sir Charles Gudgeon, circulated among the saloon passengers and collected nearly $1,000 for the sufferers. It was out of this money that the widow of Graham was reimbursed.

After the Campania's steerage passengers were landed at Ellis Island the Inspectors there found out that Margaret Cleary and Mary Cosgrove, two of the passengers swept overboard and lost, were raised together in Tipperary, Ireland, and were coming to this country to join their sisters, who reside near Meriden, Conn. They were sitting with their arms around each other on a bench on the liner's deck when enveloped by the flood and carried off to their doom in the tempestuous ocean.

A most pitiful feature of the docking of the Campania after her disastrous voyage was the grief of friends and relatives of the steerage passengers who gathered on the pier to greet those who arrived. None of these people had heard of the wireless report of the disaster, but the gangplank had hardly been laid in place when a report reached the crowd that five of the steerage passengers had been washed overboard. The report grew to ten, to twenty, to fifty, as it spread through the crowd. In a few minutes the people began to cry hysterically, for in the uncertainty of the report no one knew who had suffered the loss of a friend or relative.

Just before the Campania reached New York the saloon passengers drew up a set of resolutions, thanking Capt. Warr and his men for the manner in which they handled the liner during the accident.

CASHIER UP FOR FORGERY.

Three Indictments Against Employe of the Polyclinic Hospital.

George W. Curtiss, cashier of the New York Polyclinic Medical School and Hospital at 214 East Thirty-fourth Street, was arraigned yesterday before Judge McMahon in General Sessions and held for trial on three indictments for forgery.

Dr. Charles H. Chetwood, Secretary of the institution, said that the cashier had forged the indorsements on two checks for $50 each and on one for $250, donated for payment of the hospital mortgage bonds.

Curtiss has been in the employ of the hospital many years. He furnished $5,000 bail, fixed by the court.

ASKS $150,000 FOR LIBEL.

Papers in an action for $150,000 damages for libel against the New York and Pennsylvania Pulp Company of 41 Park Row, of which A. G. Paine is President, were served yesterday. The plaintiff is Edward P. Hatch, Jr., of the firm of Lord & Taylor. The company is charged with sending out letters accusing Mr. Hatch of spreading false reports in regard to the pollution of Lake Champlain.

The suit is the result of a fight, prolonged over ten years and vigorously prosecuted in the last two years, against the pollution of the waters of Lake Champlain by pulp mills. It was waged by the owners of riparian rights along the shores of the lake, many of whom are well-known New Yorkers.

Mr. Hatch, who is the owner of extensive property near the lake, assumed the leadership of the movement and obtained the active interest and support of Dr. Seward Webb, George H. Allen, Henry Holt, and other well-known Summer residents.

As the result of unceasing efforts against the mill owners, in which Mr. Hatch's life was several times imperiled by the lawless element in the Adirondacks, Gov. Odell ordered the State Board of Health to make an investigation, which resulted in establishing the fact that the weters of the lake were polluted by refuse from the mills.

The pulp mill owners throughout the State used every endeavor to throttle the anti-pollution movement and thus save remodeling their plants. Letters went to many signers of the petition presented to Gov. McCullough of Vermont counseling them "to avoid being led into misrepresentations" by Mr. Hatch. He alleges that the letters libeled him in several ways.

"Some while ago," said Mr. Hatch yesterday, "the mill owners were instrumental in allowing it to be stated publicly that they had brought suit against me. Later they saw fit to deny this. Every statement I ever made about the pollution of the lake has been verified by the State health authorities. Now I intend to see if a corporation can cause letters to be sent to various persons and publications reflecting on my honesty, character, and reputation and escape such punishment as is prescribed by law."

LARGEST ELECTRIC ROAD.

Contract Closed for a Line from Spokane to Moscow, Wash.

A contract has just been closed for the construction and equipment of the Spokane and Inland Railway extending from Spokane to Moscow, Washington, a distance of 146 miles.

The organization is controlled by a number of Spokane capitalists, of whom J. P. Graves is the President. The system for electrifying the line is the Westinghouse single phase alternating current system, the same the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad is going to adopt as part of its system, and for which purpose it recently contracted with the Westinghouse Company for twenty-five locomotives.

Power for operating the road will be obtained from the Washington Water Power Company, which has harnessed the waters of the Spokane River, and the electric current will be transmitted at a pressure of 4,000 volts to the power station of the railroad company. From this station electric current will be transmitted along the line of the track at the enormous pressure of 50,000 volts to fifteen transformer sub-stations located along the line. In these stations the current will be reduced for the operation of the motors on the cars.

The road will be equipped for passenger, freight, mail, and express service. Each passenger car will be provided with four 100-horse-power motors, capable of maintaining a schedule speed of 35 to 40 miles an hour. In the freight service four 150-horse-power motors will be used on each car.

For the heavy freight service double locomotives, weighing approximately 70 to 80 tons, will be used, each consisting of two parts and each part a complete 35 to 40 ton locomotive. Two or more of these locomotives may be coupled together and operated from the front cab as a single unit.

The motor cars and locomotives will all be operated by the Westinghouse multiple unit control system. The electrical apparatus for the equipment of the road approximates almost $1,000,000.

When placed in operation the road will constitute the longest electric railway in this country.

SAW FRENCH MANOEUVRES.

Gen. Chaffee, Gen. Bell, and the Other Army Officers Back.

Lieut. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, Chief of the General Staff; Brig. Gen. James F. Bell, Brig. Gen. Crozier, Capt. Grote Hutchinson, Capt. D. T. Moore, and Capt. D. E. Nolan, United States Army, who went to France to witness the army manoeuvres there, arrived home on the American Liner Philadelphia yesterday. Gen. Chaffee said he could not make public his impressions of the French Army before reporting to President Roosevelt.

"There were 80,000 men mobilized for these manoeuvres," said Gen. Bell, "and I can only say in a general way, without going into detail, that they were highly instructive.

"The French soldier, the man in the ranks, is a good soldier. With him soldiering in time of peace and in an event like these field manoeuvres is a serious matter. He does not consider it a pastime. He seems to be full of qualities that are valuable in a soldier who is likely to be called upon to campaign."

UNION TAILORS TO UNITE.

Plans for One Organization for the United States and Canada.

A plan of amalgamation has been agreed upon by committees of the United Garment Workers of America and the Journeymen Tailors' Union, by which all the union tailors in the United States and Canada will be in one organization. The plan, which involves 100,000 men and women, was put to a referendum vote of all locals yesterday. The votee are to be in not later than Jan. 1, 1906.

The plan provides for four branches of the proposed international union. Each branch will have jurisdiction over its own trade affairs. The separate sections will include:

First—The custom tailors, who ere to control all custom tailoring—that is, tailoring on suits made to order.

Second—The cutters, who are to control the cutting in all four branches.

Third—The garment workers employed on ready-made clothing.

Fourth—Garment workers employed on overalls and other special articles of clothing.

BOTANY FOR CHILDREN.

Free Lectures on Nature Studies Announced for Them in the Bronx.

The school children of the Bronx are to be aided in their nature studies this Fall by a course of free illustrated lectures to be given in the lecture hall of the museum building of the New York Botanical Gardens.

The subjects for the course include "Industries Dependent on Forests" and "Plant Products," to be delivered by Dr. Henry H. Rusby. Immediately after the lectures the children in groups of about seventy will be escorted through the park to see the plants in growth.

Another course of lectures will be given by Dr. W. A. Murrill on "Woody Plants and Plants Without Wood" and "Protection of Trees in Cities." The lectures concerning trees will be supplemented by walks through the park to see the trees.

FRAMING NEW QUESTIONS FOR PRESIDENT M'CURDY

Hughes Wants to Know About Those Stationery Bills.

MUTUAL'S HEAD HARD TO FIND

Experience of a Reporter Who Went Searching for His Office and Hasn't Found It Yet.

With Counsel Charles E. Hughes taking his Saturday off for golf and most of the Investigating Committee up the State over Sunday, yesterday was a quiet day in insurance matters. Counsel, however, have been digging into the testimony already given by President McCurdy of the Mutual Life and other high officials of that company, and when Mr. McCurdy is called to the stand again on Tuesday Mr. Hughes will have an interesting line of inquiries framed up for him.

Mr. Hughes's next inquiries will bear upon the legislative activities of the Mutual and the possible relation between these and certain figures in the reports of expenditures for "printing, advertising, and stationery." It is believed that Thomas L. Bowles, the Mutuel's former general agent in Milwaukee, who two years ego conducted a campaign against the McCurdy management, knows a good deal about legislative matters in New York State end elsewhere, and can give valuable testimony if it becomes necessary to call him.

One thing about which President McCurdy will be asked is whether or not be was cognizant of the conditions that Mr. Bowles described in the circular he served by legel process upon all Mutual Trustees in his fight against the company.

President McCurdy himself is inaccessible these days, except by letter and appointment. Indeed, some doubt is entertained by those who have been familiar with the paths end by-paths of the Mutual Building as to just where Mr. McCurdy is making his office. The recent experience of the correspondent of an out-of-town newspeper is being told in Wall Street as illustrating this fact.

This correspondent walked up to an attendant in the Mutual's main office and asked where President McCurdy's office was. The attendant turned him over to the Bureau of Information, at the Liberty Street corner of the building. The man who wanted to see Mr. McCurdy had to confess that he represented a newspaper. He was promptly sent to the Mutual's Literary Bureau, on the seventh floor.

But the Literery Bureau didn't know where Mr. McCurdy's office was, much less where Mr. McCurdy wes. It had no information about the insurance investigation, if indeed an insurance investigation was actually being held. Perhaps Mr. Sullivan, the Mutual's advertising manager, might know something about it. His office was in Cedar Street.

After trying 53, 51, and 40 Ceder Street, the correspondent reached Mr. Sullivan's office at 47. But Mr. Sullivan was out, and nobody would assume to say in his absence where Mr. McCurdy's office was.

Then a bright thought struck the searcher. He would ask the Secretary of the company. The hallman in the lower hall said that the Secretary's office was on the second floor, in the main offices of the building. So the correspondent went up there again and asked an attendant. The attendant referred him to the Bureau of Information, where the elderly pereon who had first steered him to the Literary Bureau asked if it was a matter of newspaper business, and then referred the correspondent back to the Literary Bureau.

Remembering his first experience, the correspondent thought of other devices. A second bright thought struck him. He would try all the other officers he could think of in the hope that one of them might be able to tell him where President McCurdy's office was. The hallman down in the mail hall said that Treasurer Cromwell's office was on the second floor. Back went the correspondent to the second floor, only to be directed again to the Bureau of Information.

He knew better than to go there now, and so went back to the lower hall and asked the hallman where the Vice President's office was. The hallman said it was on the seventh floor on the Liberty Street side.

The correspondent took courage. Here at least wae one official whose office was out of the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Information. He went up to the seventh floor and asked to see the Vice President. Which Vice President? the attendant wanted to know. Any Vice President would do, the correspondent said. A gray-suited attendant disappeared, and returned in a few minutes with the message that the Vice Presidents were all busy. This staggered the correspondent, weakened by his long journeying, but he plucked up courage for a final effort, and asked the gray-suited attendant if he knew where President McCurdy's office was.

"What do you want to see President McCurdy about?" the attendant asked.

"I represent a newspaper, of B—town," replied the correspondent.

"Well," said the gray-suited attendant, pityingly, "you'd better go to the Bureau of information on the second—"

He got no further. The correspondent had fled.

TO BAR MUTUAL RESERVE.

Heirs of a Policy Holder Bring a Suit in Maryland.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 14.—A petition charging illegal and fraudulent methods of doing business was filed to-day with the State Insurance Commissioner, in behalf of the late Dr. Elias C. Price, asking that the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company of New York be debarred from doing business in Maryland.

The Commissioner hes sent a copy of the petition to the insurance company. The heirs of Dr. Price have now pending in court an action against the company to recover premiums and assessments paid by him in seventeen years. The company finally raised his assessment to $517 on a policy of $5,000, which was not paid. In the petition it is stated that the company is the legal successor to the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, whose license was revoked by former Commissioner Wilkinson. Commissioner Duncan, who retired to-day to enter the Judiciary, said that after the company came back into the field under a new name Mr. Wilkinson admitted it.

"I had had a great deal of trouble because of its methods of doing business," oontinued Mr. Duncan. "In fact, one recent case was so evidently outrageous that I had firmly made up my mind to debar the company when its applicetion for continued rights in this State was filed in December. Of course, my resignation leaves this matter for others to settle, but I certainly should have refused the company the privilege."

INSURANCE SAFE IN TEXAS.

State Commissioner Advises Against Barring the Big Companies.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas, Oct. 14.— W. J. Clay, State Insurance Commissioner of Texas, mads a written report to Gov. Lanham to-day upon the result of his investigation of the effairs of the New York Life and other insurance companies.

He says the companies are solvent and recommends that no action be taken at this time to bar them from Texas.

BILL TO CONTROL INSURANCE.

Senator Dryden Expects to Present It Again and Asks Opinions.

For the purpose of obtaining a comprehensive expression of public opinion on the question of National control of life insurance companies, United States Senator John F. Dryden hes sent out the following circular:

In his last annual message President Roosevelt called the attention of Congress to the necessity for Federal legislation providing for the regulation and control of insurance companies transacting inter-State and international business. In compliance with an increasing demand from insurance policy holders and others interested in the public welfare I introduced into the last Congress a bill to this effect, providing that there should be established within the Bureau of Corporations a Division of Insurance, and that policies of insurance were deemed to be articles of commerce and instrumentalities thereof. The bill was introduced too late to secure final consideration, but the demand for such a measure has become even more apparent in the meantime, and I expect to reintroduce the same, possibly with slight modifications, into the Congress which is to meet in December.

The bill will be introduced on behalf of the policy holders of all American insurance companies, in the firm belief that their present and future interests demand the additional protection of a Federal statute regulating insurance transactions between the States, in addition, of course, to such supervision and regulation as constitutionally belongs to the States from which the companies derive their charters. Furthermore, that by eliminating e considerable amount of needless State supervision important benefits are expected to result.

Senator Dryden enumerated several ways in which he says the policy holders will be advantaged and propounds questions, to which he asks a "Yes" or "No" answer. Here ere the questions:

Do you indorse the suggestion of President Roosevelt that insurance companies engaged in international insurance business should be regulated by and brought under the control of the Federal Government?

Do you hold the insurance business to be a National rather than a local interest, and properly entitled to the solicitude and care of the National Government?

As a matter of personal opinion, do you hold the business of insurance to be commerce, or an integral and indispensable element of commerce, in the sense in which this term is used in every-day language?

Are you in any way apprehensive that it would be inexpedient or inadvisable to increase the power of the Federal Government to the extent implied in the regulation of insurance by Congress?

Senator Dryden invites eny comments that the recipients of the circulars choose to make.

TO CHECK INSURANCE GRAFT.

Jersey Democrats Declare for Laws Protecting Policy Holders.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Oct. 14.—The Democratic County Convention here today renominated William Childs, Jr., of Bridgewater, the New York restaurant man, for State Senator, and Walter Durling of Somerville for member of Assembly. The platform adopted favors legislation which will protect policy holders of life insurance companies. It also favors legislation to prevent the use of great trust funds for speculative schemes, and to restrain the excessive salaries which their officials receive.

The platform further declares for legislation forbidding the use of funds of corporations for election purposes. It favors equal taxation, limited franchisee, and the abolition of voting machines.

UNION LEAGUE'S MOVING.

Realty Brokers Say It Shows How Soon the Costliest Buildings Must Go.

Seldom has news of the passing even of a historic landmark aroused greater interest or surprise than did the announcement in yesterday's TIMES that the Union League Club is thinking seriously of abandoning its present site at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-ninth Street.

Real estate men were inclined yesterdey to regard the proposed change as showing the transitory character of even the costliest structures in this city. They recalled as another instance the sale of the Progress Club's handsome house at Fifth Avenue and Sixty-third Street to James B. Haggin less than eight years after it had been built.

The Union League Club, it was pointed out, has found itself engaged in a highly successful real estate speculation, and, if sentimental considerations do not prevail, can well afford to give up a house built less than twenty-five years ago.

Brokers in the Fifth Avenue section are already busy looking over the territory for available sites, and if the club decides to move, its committee will certainly not be narrowed down in its selection to any two or three locations.

COOPER EXCHANGE WILL PAY.

Bank's Depositors to Receive Dollar for Dollar This Week.

Max Schwartz, a Director of the Cooper Exchange Bank, which recently was closed by order of the State Superintendent of Banking, announced yesterday that by Wednesday the bank's depositors would receive their money dollar for dollar.

The Fourteenth Street Bank, at Fourteenth Street and Fifth Avenue, has assumed the business of the Cooper Exchange Bank, taking it as a branch. All liabilities and assets have been taken, and claims will be promptly paid.

Mr. Schwartz asks depositore not to sell their claims to sharpers who are about the bank, offering to buy them for from 75 to 80 per cent. of the amount due. A full dollar will be paid for every dollar deposited.

NEW ROADS TO BLACK HILLS.

Northwestern Plans Second Line, and St. Paul Is Constructing One.

The Pierre, Rapid City and Northwestern Railway Company has been incorporated in South Dakota in the interest of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. The new line will run from Pierre to Rapid City, 165 miles. This will give the Chicago and Northwestern a second line to the Black Hills.

The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul is also building a line into the Black Hills. The St. Paul line to Rapid City is an extension of that road from Chamberlain, about 190 miles east of Rapid City. Seventy-five miles of this line are about completed, and the rest will be undertaken next Spring.

PEDLER VOTE IS McCLELLAN'S.

Their Representatives to Meet and Indorse the Mayor's Candidacy.

A call was issued yesterday for a meeting of representatives of 11,000 peddlers at 98 Forsyth Street, to discuss what stand they will take in the coming campaign. Many of them are in favor of indorsing the candidacy of Mayor McClellan, on account of concessions he has obtained for them. Sigmund Schwartz, who will preside at the meeting, said yesterday:

"Mayor McClellan has done more for the peddlers than any other city official. He has in view a plan by which they can have their stande in markets, where the police can't interfere with them."

BOLOGNA BOSSES FIRM.

They Won't Recognize the Sausage-makers and Ham Carvers' Union.

The Bologna Manufacturers' Association has replied to Butchers' Union 174, comprising bologna makers, ham carvers, and pork butchers, refusing to recognize the union. Each of the employers is under bonds to observe the rules of the association, and the membership has been extended to Hudson County, N. J., so that the employers will be prepared to give the union a fight.

The reply says that in case strikes are ordered a general lockout will be declered. The lockout will affect about 7,000 men in New York and its vicinity.

L. C. Van Riper Was Not Indicted.

An erroneous statement printed yesterday that L. C. Van Riper, the cotton broker, was indicted by the Federal Grand Jury in Washington in connection with the cotton leak scandal, was corrected yesterday in a statement issued by John W. Brainsby, Mr. Van Riper's attorney. Mr. Van Riper was not indicted by the Federal Grand Jury or by any other.

CAMPAIGN IN NEW JERSEY NOW AT FEVER HEAT

Suspicion That Corporations Have Turned Against Fagan.

STATE MACHINE ANTAGONISTIC

Big Registration in Jersey City and Small Registration in Essex Furnish Food for Political Thought.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, Oct. 14.—A big registration in Jersey City and a small registration in Essex are food for thought among the observers of the anti-boss and anti-monopoly campaign in New Jersey.

Far more discussed in Jersey City than the equal tax problem ar the questions of whether Mayor Fagan received and pocketed $1,500 of ex-Senator Smith's money in his first campaign for the Mayoralty, whether his attitude toward the Mayor's campaign makes a party bolter of Col. Dickinson, or whether the Mayor is to be regarded as the bolter, because of his defiance of the machine that put him in nomination.

Mayor Fagan has allowed his main proposition to collide with so many side issues that the large registration in his city is regarded as not wholly in his interest, and there is even a suspicion abroad that the corporations have turned their army of retainers loose upon him for his overwhelming defeat at the polls. The Mayor has lost none of his confidence in the success of his campaign, and declares that the great list of intending voters only forecasts an unprecedented majority for him next month.

At the same time he makes no attempt to conceal his anxiety over the Secretary of State's action in ordering the new voting mechines set up in every one of the Democratic precincts from which he expects to get the bulk of the independent support, without which he cannot win. His managers are preparing to open schools all through the district for the instruction of the voters in their use when they come to split their tickets. It is conceded that the machines were introduced by the bosses because they obstruct the voting of split tickets and help to keep the rank and file of the parties in line for the machine candidates. They are particularly acceptable to the Republican machine managers, because it takes the ordinary Democratic constituencies longer to acquaint themselves with the method of operating them than it does the Republican constituencies.

In spite of the assignment by the Secretary of State of a dozen of the machines to the election booths where they can do the Mayor the most harm, there are rumors that the Mayor and the Secretary of State are taking steps for patching up their differences. The overtures are described as having come from Col. Dickinson through County Clerk Rotherham, his best man. The Colonel has a deep personal interest in the candidacy of Kaiser for the Shrievalty of the county, and is afraid that the break in the party will hurt Kaiser more than it can harm Fagan. The Mayor is said to have sent answer that he would rather have the Colonel against him; the Colonel retaliated at the meeting of the County Committee yesterday by leaving Jersey City entirely out of the distribution of the committee's dough bag and a fund of $8,000 in the committee's treasury was scattered among other communities.

Mr. Colby is pressing his fight in all directions. He has made it possible to keep the relations of the Public Service Corporetion with the public under review during the campaign through the agency of a special commission appointed by the Common Council last evening to exploit a franchise deal between the City Board of Works and the company made early in the year.

Major Lentz had a long conference at Trenton Tuesday with State Treasurer Briggs, Gov. Stokes, and other State leaders. It has since become known to inside circles that there was little sympathy expressed with the Essex and Hudson reformers. It is an open secret, too, that the conferrees were in a fine state of consternation over the situation that confronts them. They were agreed that the Colby-Fagan-Record triumvirate are reaching out for the control of the State on lines that forbid hope of compromise or of fusion with the powers that be; that the triumph of the trio in the most important and populous counties of the State must bring upon the rest of the State leaders the humiliations that have already come to Major Lentz, and that their prestige can be saved only by the defeat of the menacing candidacies.

The whole force of the State machine is to be directed to the overwhelming of Colby and Fagan. The first eymptom is the disclosure of a sudden interest on the part of State Treasurer Briggs, whom the State managers have billed to succeed Stokes as Governor, in the canvass and personality of Julian Gregory, the Democretic candidate against Colby. A second may be the low registration here. It is quite evident that Major Lentz has not had hie lieutenants get voters ready for the polls with his wonted energy.

Meanwhile the revolt is spreading along both the anti-boss and anti-monopoly lines with steady pace. It is so sweeping that some of Col. Dickinson's nominees have been forced to denounce in public others of his candidates. In Ocean County it hes bred a non-partisan fusion of candidates on the theory of the best fitted from both ranks for the county offices. In Passaic the City Convention has adopted a platform that specifically discountenances the action of the Republicen County Convention.

In Monmouth Republican clubs are taking action for the defeat of Frencis, the Republican candidate for Sheriff. The Burlington County Republican Convention has enlarged the sphere of anti-monopoly activity, by pledging its legislative candidates to an official investigation of the methods of the insurance companies doing business in the State.

To Ratify the Socialist Ticket.

The Socialist Labor Party will hold a ratification meeting to-morrow night at 8 o'clock at the Palm Garden, in Fifty-eighth Street. Workingmen are especially invited. The candidate for Mayor, John J. Kinnealy and Daniel De Leon, who is now the recognized head of the party, will speak. The entire city ticket will be ratified.

SWINDLER MASQUERADED AS A GAS COLLECTOR

But Once Too Often for a Woman Who Had Paid Her Bill.

CAUGHT BY HOBOKEN CROWD

Policeman Had to Use His Club to Protect Him—Prisoner Is Accused of Robbing Hundreds.

A dapper young men handed a slip of paper to Mrs. Mary Symes, at the door of her apartments in Fourteenth Street, Hoboken, told her it was her gas bill, and asked for settlement. It happened that Mrs. Symes had paid her gas bill only the day before.

"Why, you're the 'gas thief'!" she exclaimed. He turned and ran to the street, with Mrs. Symes following.

"There goes the 'gas thief'!" she cried to Policeman Eckhardt. "Catch him!"

"The gas thief!" shouted the crowd that had gathered, and instantly a hundred men and women were in hot pursuit of him. All had heard of the "gas thief." With his slips of paper made to look as much as possible like those the gas collector carries, he is said to have swindled a small army of women. Those who had not been his victims had heard of him, and the cry "the gas thief!" brought all of Fourteenth Street out for the chase.

The young man was fleet of foot, however, and kept well in advence of the crowd until William Elmendorf, a photographer, who had been attracted by the excitement, overtook the runner and threw him to the pavement. Then Policeman Eckhardt ran up and seized him.

The crowd wented to teach the young man a lesson on the spot, and the policeman's club was kept as busy as if it were beating off a swarm of mosquitos. He finally landed his prisoner, unharmed, in the stetion. The man said he was Edward J. Maloney of Clinton Street, Newark. He eaid that he had swindled only five housekeepers. The police say thet he has operated not only in Hoboken, but in Jersey City, Newark, and Bergen County, and thet his victims number severel hundred.

ARMY DESERTER SURRENDERS.

Prefers Prison Life Here to Being Free in France.

Because he would rather be a United States Army prisoner than to be free in France, Paul Ferragu was taken from Ellis Island to Governors Island and locked up in Castle Williams yesterday afternoon. He had been ordered deported on La Lorraine, and to prevent the carrying out of the order he confessed that he was a deserter from the United States Army.

Ferragu enlisted in the army at West Point June 16, 1903, and on June 15 of this year decided that he would like to have another glimpse of France, and deserted. He shipped on the Hudson for Havre as a deckhand.

When he got there his native land seemed to have lost interest for the Frenchman, and he returned to this country on La Lorraine as a stoweway.

SCHOOLS IN BAD CONDITION.

Stagnant Pools Endanger Pupils' Health Down Coney Way.

The local School Board of District 38, which embreces all the schools in the Coney Island, Bath Beach, Bay Ridge, Vanderveer Park, Prospect Park South, and Windsor Terrace sections, has made a vigorous protest in its semi-annual report to the Board of Education against the condition of a number of schools in the district.

The report says that the health of the pupils at Public School 80, near Neptune Avenue, Coney Island, is being endangered by the pools of stagnant water in nearby lots; that Public School 128 in Twenty-first Avenue has its cellar flooded by every storm; that the children in School 99, Coney Island Road and Elm Avenue, have no playroom, and have to go out for their drinking water, and that similar conditions exist in a number of other schools in the district.

The cooking classes in Public School 130, Ocean Parkway and Fort Hamilton Avenue, are handicapped by the absence of gas and water connections in the school kitchen. There are a number of defects in Public School 139, Avenue C and East Thirteenth Street. The local board says that this school needs storm doors, because in the Winter months drifting snow blocks the outside stairs.

The Shattered Angels---An Art Tragedy

Borglum, the Sculptor, Who Deliberately Destroyed His Own Work in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine Because His Angels Had Been Criticised as Being Too Feminine, Defends His Artistic Conception of the Heavenly Messengers.

THE ANGEL OF THE ANNUNCIATION.
(From a Photograph Taken in Mr. Borglum's Studio.)

"I Piped to You and Ye Did Not Dance."

In the Soul of a Man are his dreams,
But his Faith is the prayer that redeems
The truth from the lie,
The clay and the sky—
Shapes the uttermost reach of his schemes.

THE story of how Gutzon Borglum, the Danish sculptor, destroyed last week the figures of two angels he had conceived for the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, on Morningside Heights, has been told.

The reason, more or less imperfectly conveyed in the newspapers, was the criticism aroused by a man (with whiskers) against the feminine sex of these imaged angels. Some day there will be a third gender, applicable to symbolic figures in clay, or bronze, or marble—a statuesque sex.

The humorous side of the criticism aroused against a divine application of the woman's form in the figures of angels has been exploited.

The question whether angels are masculine or feminine has been raised, and Dr. Huntington spent an evening in the sculptor's studio puzzling over ecclesiastical standards.

This interview between the Church dignitary and the artist-sculptor must have been extremely interesting, touching the dividing lines between Scriptural law and an artist's interpretation of it.

"Dr. Huntington was very nice, indeed. I cannot tell you what passed between us, because it was confidential, but he agreed with me that a man must express his own faith in his own way, if he can express it at all," said Mr. Borglum.

The result of this studio talk with Dr. Huntington was entirely satisfactory to the sculptor, for he told me that he would remodel the two angels he had destroyed, and modify their embarrassment of sex.

They will be feminine, because Mr. Borglum must choose the outline of face and form that will render to the eye the most of tenderness and beauty, but—he says with a certain grim patience—"I will modify them."

So, the little meddling spirit of interference with the sculptor's ideals has passed on to do what damage it can somewhere else, as such spirits always do—and the incident is over.

But, the sculptor being a man who can and does create, the occurrence has become one of intimate tragic experience to him.

"There it is, the elusive thing in an artist's life—appreciation. It comes, but it comes too late, after you have given your heart to other things, other ambitions," he said, as he pointed out paintings, sketches, clay models, bronzes, and plaster casts that had taken shape and symbolism by his hand.

"You destroyed these angels because you were hurt?"

Before he could answer, his secretary, a younger man, voiced a rather useful idea in any studio.

"I hate pathos of any kind, especially newspaper pathos," and the sculptor meekly asked the young man to express the emotion for him. He did not do so successfully, but his suggestion had a bearing upon this matter of the sex of angels, or rather the sex of any symbolic figure that may take shape in poetic reverie, whether human or divine.

There is pathos in all sex questions.

Borglum is not the sort of man who arrivee at an idea by the cheap transit of pathos. Although he achieves by the light of emotional impressions, he executes intellectually.

He achieved the two angels in this way, by the light of his reverent, his religious emotions, and he destroyed them because his intellectual standards had been challenged.

This he told me by inferential method, because he never talks directly for publication.

"Now, there, for instance, is the same question, the question of sex," he said, pausing before a group; "it embodies my contention that most people never get beyond the problem of sex."

The group was described by a text from the New Testament, "I piped to you, and ye did not dance."

It symbolizes the despair of a woman who, finding that her appeal to the man's higher nature has failed, turns away from him, and only the ensuing silence awakens him.

"I was impressed with the idea in this way," said Borglum. "I went to a concert with a friend and heard Ysaye play one of Brahms's compositions exquisitely. I was moved, delighted, enthusiastic, and I turned to my friend to discuss it with him. He was silent, the music had not touched him, we could not meet, and I was disappointed. He dined with me that evening, and we spent the rest of the time in my studio. Still he was apathetic; art and its inspirations made no appeal—he was silent. It impressed me very much. I wondered how I might express this spiritual void, and this group was the result."

It conveys the blind apathy of man to spiritual suggestions all about him, and his awakening to them only when they are taken away from him.

"The woman looks old!"

"Could you expect a woman to stay young after such a realization? Friends have suggested that the face might be younger; but, look," and he picked up a plaster cast of a beautiful young woman's face. He held it at arm's length.

"There is innocence, purity, beauty; but could these remain after the woman had suffered such indignity?"

"So you arrived at your expression of the angel face and figure?"

"By respecting the feeling as much as the technic of my work. I needed, first of all, beauty, and the woman's figure is the more beautiful, the more adaptable to tenderness, to spiritual intention. This intention I had thought about and suggested in that other group we were just looking at, and so my angels were women. I arrived at my conclusione not as a copyist, but as I always try to do, through my own interpretation. Then there was another

The Mystery of the Universal Ether

AN unsophisticated mind never has any trouble while thinking about space and its properties. Things may be here and there, and there is distance between them, and distance may be any magnitude and in any direction, and space is as real as the next house or the moon. Furthermore, the notion of the emptiness or vacuity of space and its occupancy by bodies of some sort is so easily attained and seems so rational that nothing could disturb it, yet in this as in so many other cases what has seemed obvious turns out to be a mistake and illustrates the proposition that things are not what they seem. Geometricians meet no resistance in projecting a line of any length in any direction, and their volumes have neither mass nor energy. When experience is confronted with $\frac{MV^2}{2}$ in any form it begins to be apparent that the ideal space and the space we live in are not comparable. In noting amounts and directions of planetary movements the astronomers could assume actio in distans and did not need to ask how, but the philosopher interested in the rationale of phenomena was disturbed at the assumption that one body could act on another body at a distance through empty space.

\+ + +

Sir Isaac Newton repudiated such a notion. He saw the logical necessity for some sort of a medium in space by and through which separate bodies could act upon each other. He declared that no one with competent faculty of thinking could think otherwise. Newton's "Principia" is a treatise on the laws of mechanics and gravitation applied to the members of the Solar System. He did not need for that purpose to consider by what agency gravitative action became possible. All such problems as he there dealt with were concerned with masses, distances, and velocities, but he leaves us in no doubt as to his thinking about another factor in phenomena of all sorts by this paragraph at the end of "The Principia":

"And now we might add something concerning a most subtile spirit which pervades and lies hid in all gross bodies, by the force and action of which spirit the particles of bodies attract each other at near distances and cohere if contiguous, and electric bodies operate at greater distances, as well repelling as attracting neighboring corpuscles, and light is emitted, reflected, inflected, and heats bodies, and all sensation is excited and members of animal bodies move at the command of will."

What he called "Spirit" was what is called to-day "The Ether." The first physical demand for a space medium came when it was observed that it required a thousand seconds for the light from Jupiter to cross the diameter of the earth's orbit, which is 186,000,000 miles, so its velocity is 186,000 miles a second. When it was noted that light itself is a wave motion, and that the air is at most but a hundred miles thick, and space beyond that is empty of matter, it seemed clear there must be some medium capable of wave motion to transmit light. Also as light comes from the stars in every direction and at all distances, this medium, the ether, must fill all the space of the visible universe.

With astonishing accuracy the astronomer can measure the distance in miles to some of the stars, but the number of miles when written out is too big to be impressive, as no one can imagine the immensity of only one million. On a clear moonless night only about 2,000 stars can be seen by the unaided eye. If a million stars were in sight with the same measure of distribution the firmament would need to be 500 times bigger. So distances are stated in a larger unit, namely, the distance light will travel in a second, 186,000 miles. With this unit as a measure the light of our nearest star neighbor requires four and a third years to reach us; of Sirius, eight years; the pole star, 48 years; Arcturus, 150 years; while that from the new star of 1901 requires 3,400 years. Now the significance of all this here lies in the plain implication that the whole of this interstellar space must be filled with the ether, else the visible stars could not be seen. If one could travel in space with the speed of light, what provision for sustenance would be needed for the relatively short journey to our nearest neighbor? One may be sure he could travel thus in any direction for millions of years without coming to the boundary of the ether.

Other activities between separated bodies, such as magnetism and electricity and heat, needed an explanation as much as light, and imponderables were invented which could now be in and now out of bodies. When in, bodies behaved thus and thus; when out, nobody was concerned as to the whereabouts of the agencies. After the breakdown of the notion of the imponderables, specific ethers were invented. A magnetic ether for magnetism and electric ether for electricity, and so on. Faraday, with an insight beyond any of his contemporaries, showed that the luminiferous ether, already well substantiated, could well enough be the medium and agency for the other phenomena. His contemporaries would not heed him, for physicists as a class have a higher regard for an equation than they have for a genius. Even after Maxwell showed that Faraday's conceptions were comparable with mathematics, most thought they were more interesting than probable. Skillful experiments, however, showed that alternating magnetism in a magnet set up waves in the space about it which had all the characteristics of light waves. They were propagated with the same velocity, could be reflected, refracted, polarized, and in other ways conformed to the laws of light. One may fairly say that physics has been Faradized, for his conceptions have prevailed.

This new knowledge vastly increased the interest in and the physical importance of the ether, and has directed investigations into its nature and characteristics so one may be able to form a notion of its structure. Already we are able to make a long list of the properties of matter and of the laws of operation in matter. In ordinary phenomena it consists of molecules and of atoms of which there are about eighty different kinds, called elements, such as hydrogen, oxygen, carbon, silver, &c., easily identified, and their sizes measured, and are approximately about the fifty millionth of an inch in diameter, and a cubic inch of matter contains a number of atoms represented by 123 followed by 21 ciphers. All kinds of matter possess the characteristic property of gravity, also elasticity, density, hardness, attractions of various sorts, are affected by heat, electricity, and so on in measurable ways.

Now all our conceptions of material things have been derived from our experience with matter and its properties, and it might be expected that in trying to form a conception of a space-filling medium one would first imagine it to consist of some finer-grained matter, having properties similar to the familiar kind that affects our senses, and many persons who have given the subject thought have persisted in calling the ether matter of some sort, though it is easy to show that the term is inappropriate. Here is the law of gravitation which states that every particle of matter attracts every other particle of matter. If there be one substance without that quality of attraction, it is improper to call it matter, and all experimental evidence shows not the slightest indication of that property in the ether. It is gravitationless. One may speak of the ether as substance to distinguish it from matter.

When one seeks for the other properties of matter in the ether he is at once struck by differences which seem fundamental. The densest matter is more or less porous. Gold will absorb mercury as a lump of sugar will absorb water, showing there must be interstices or interatomic spaces in it, but the ether shows no such property. If a drop of water could be magnified sufficiently one would ultimately see the different atoms of hydrogen and oxygen that constitute the molecules of water. If a small volume of ether could be thus magnified the indications are that the ultimate part would look like the first, which is the same as saying that it is not made up of discrete particles, but fills space completely. This is expressed by saying that the ether is a continuous medium and is hence incomparable with matter.

The compactness of molecules in a mass of matter may be varied by increase or decrease of pressure, varying its density, but a substance-filling space and not made up of discrete particles cannot have density in any such sense as has matter. In like manner all kinds of matter have elasticity in some degree, and this is measured by the velocity of sound waves in it. The highest velocity due to elasticity in matter is about 3 miles per second, but a ray of light in the ether has a velocity of 186,000 miles in a second, more than 60,000 times faster than sound. It seems clear that if this be due to elasticity this must be of a different type from that exhibited by matter.

We now describe heat as the vibratory motion of atoms and molecules, and all kinds of matter may be heated and may have any temperature within possible limits, but a substance not made up of elastic particles cannot be heated. So it appears to be improper to speak of the temperature of free space. The sun's radiations are not heat, but ether waves, which may be transformed into heat when they fall upon a mass of matter. The ether is heatless.

A stone thrown or a bullet shot into the air loses its speed continuously. The motion is imparted to the air and the energy dissipated by friction, but there is no evidence that a body moving in free ether space is ever retarded in the slightest degree.

The earth has been revolving about the sun at the rate of nearly nineteen miles a second for tens of thousands of years. Astronomers tell us that the length of the year has not changed the hundredth of a second within the past two thousand years. This means that the earth meets no resistance in space, that the ether is frictionless. A railroad train moves a large body of air as it passes, but the most refined experiments have failed to show that the ether is disturbed in the slightest degree by the earth's motion, either of rotation or revolution about the sun, and the rays of light from the most distant visible stars have the same speed and wave lengths as those produced close by. Multitudes of observations corroborate the conclusion that the ether is without friction and a body may move through it forever without loss of speed.

There are many more qualities which distinguish the ether from matter as well vouched for as those mentioned, but there are two or three that deserve special mention on account of their bearing on preter-physical questions. All the phenomena which constitute the data of physical knowledge are phenomena of matter, gravitative matter, subject to pushes and pulls, stresses and strains. The changes we can note and measure we explain in accordance with uniform experience, and we call this science. We talk of Energy and state many of its laws, but no one has ever seen Energy any more than one has seen Gravity. Physical effects are attributed to it. The infinite varieties of phenomena come from the transformations of energy, and so far as we have knowledge only matter can transform it.

If space were filled with ether alone then nothing could ever happen, for its quality is uniform throughout; and if there were but one particle of matter nothing could happen, for there would be neither gravitation nor collision nor heat nor light nor attraction, and so on for all the other activities exhibited by matter. Matter appears to be the condition necessary for all phenomena, even for the perception of phenomena, for all knowledge comes through the nervous system, a special arrangement of matter. There are nerves for the perception of light, heat, sound, &c., but there are none for the perception of the ether, and the basis for the inference for the existence of the ether comes from experience of matter with matter.

Again, there is much reason for thinking that the ultimate particles of matter are ether-rings and that what we call an atom is a group of such rings, vortex-rings of ether in the ether. An ether vortex-ring would be a very permanent structure, for friction would not destroy it, and it would possess many, if not all, the properties that belong to matter. In structure it would embody energy, it could transform and transmit energy. It has long been imagined that all kinds of matter might be reducible to some common sub-structure, and the indications now are that the ether is that substance and all the properties exhibited by matter result from the particular ring-form of the embodied energy.

The ether is full of that quality we call energy, existing as radiations, and stresses of many kinds, gravitative, magnetic, electric, &c., and so great is the quantity of energy that a single cubic inch of space might yield 500 horse power if we could devise some mechanism for utilizing it.

If such relations between the ether and matter be true, then one may at once conclude that the ether and energy must have existed before matter, and some other agency independent of both, acting from choice and not from mechanical compulsion, was needed for the apparition of atoms of matter, and also that the so-called properties of matter must be due in part at least to the inherent properties of the ether. So, if life and mind are found in matter, they must be inherent in the ether. Can one get out of a machine what is not in it?

The question has been seriously asked, Cannot this immaterial, impalpable, boundless, transparent, pliant medium be properly thought of as the body of Deity itself? The answer is that a deity limited to a speed of 186,000 miles per second for activities in the universe will not serve the purposes of theology.

Failure of a Womanless Eden in the Pacific---A Strange Story from the South Seas

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES

SYDNEY, Australia, Sept. 18.—Many a strange tale has drifted out of the islands of the Western Pacific. Sometimes the schooners that trade in copra and shell bring in an account of strange happenings among these scattered lands that fairly startle sedate Sydney out of herself; but nature, as a rule, sees fit to wash in such news like wreckage, so that the former part of a story is forgotten by the time the latter part arrives

In this way, for example, the story of the tragedy at Kahakua would have been lost had not some one gone out with a notebook, instead of a basket, to pick up the fragments. Of these some ends of the tale were found at various islands of the Duke of York group, some at Ulu, the Wesleyan Methodist island; some on the "beaches" of various Australian ports, and the remainder at the Island of Kahakua itself.

The tale begins properly at the University of Bavaria, where August Englehardt, a young German student, began to develop that unhappy combination of gifts—oratory powers with radical ideas. About 1898 he had gained some distinction by pamphlets and magazine articles which he had written, calling attention to the irrationality of marriage, the suicidal tendency of civilization, the barbarity of the fleshpots of Egypt, and so forth, and ever he adorned his tale with the moral that the time had come when marriage should be stamped out as degrading to both sexes; that towns and cities should be abandoned, and that men should return to the fields; that fashion should be disregarded and men live in an unblushing state of nudity; that the fleshpots should be thrown aside for the natural fruits of the earth; in short, he advocated an Eden without Eve or the serpent, to be founded in some part of the tropics, (which he held to be the original home of man,) and called "The Palm Temple of Pure, Natural Life."

\+ + +

But now comes the strange part of Englehardt's beliefs. Up to this point the man had been, perhaps, more than rational, and it is surprising that even in the one extreme of his views he still should have found disciples. His plan was to have his sect worship the sun. He held that man was a tropic animal, not intended to live in caves called houses, but to wander, as Adam did, with the sun beating upon him all day and the dews of heaven for a mantle at night. Living such a life, he believed that the healing and curative powers of the sun would in time render a man so immune that sickness could be overcome; he even went so far as to declare that those who survived the first ordeal would conquer death and that they should be as gods.

This, then, was how August Englehardt of the University of Bavaria solved the problem of life, living, and the perpetuation of the race. There were to be no further generations; the present could be made perpetual.

In the year 1901 this imaginative, Utopian dreamer had gathered around him hundreds of disciples. Money was subscribed and the details of the project discussed.

"My idea," said Englehardt to his followers, "is to purchase from the Government (German) one of the islands in the Pacific—the most natural paradise on earth—and there enter into our Palm Temple in a body. When the experiment has been shown to the world as a success, I will girdle the equator with a chain of settlements. We will send out missionaries—men who have been tried and found not wanting—to preach our beliefs to all peoples in lands of the sun."

Then a number of conditions of membership of the Palm Temple were drafted. The most important of these were:

"Only men of noble and excellent character will be admitted.

"Each applicant must be recommended by two respected persons, both known to the leader of the sun-worshippers.

"A payment of $250 must be made by such applicants as can afford that amount; by less wealthy persons, a sum corresponding to their means, and by poor but devout sun-worshippers—nothing.

"At Kahakua all members of the order must lead a permanent naked life, joining nature in every respect."

\+ + +

At this juncture the printed rules suddenly branched off in a way that might have suggested business enterprise to less fanatical minds.

"Magnificent sea and sand baths will complete the continual sun and air baths in a manner not to be acquired out of the tropics."

The same year, 1901, Englehardt, having raised enough money and settled all details with his followers, sailed alone in search of the earthly paradise. He landed at New Britain; thence he visited the German islands around the Government station at Herbertshohe. After some delay and disappointment he saw Kahakua, which is about fifteen miles from Herbertshohe. The moment Englehardt's eye fell upon the little Pacific island he cried out that he had found it—the Palm Temple!

Kahakua, like most of the islands of the Western Pacific, is a small atoll with a lagoon breaking in from the sea at one end. From January till December the waves pound upon the white coral sand beach, over which the cocoa palms curve as if to resist the wind. Further inland on the narrow curving strip the vegetation is more dense and filled with tropic fruits—bresdfruit, mango, and gusva. Further still, and the lagoon lies like a mirror, still and glassy with a mock sun burning on its bosom. Here all is silent, save for the chirruping of birds, the racing of playful lizards along the tree branches, the occasional thud of falling fruit bursting with ripeness upon soft earth. And this peace is accentuated day and night by the rumbling roar of the sea outside the atoll. This is Kahakua, the Palm Temple of Englehardt's dream, and elsewhere in the Pacific there are hundreds of similar islands for dreamers who read the end of this history without dismay.

The Bavarian student returned to Herbertshohe only long enough to pay the purchase price to the German officials, and to send word to his disciples in Germany that all was ready: the Palm Temple awaited the entry of its priests. Then he went back to Kahakua, where he immediately divested himself of his clothes and offered his first prayer to the sun god—there on his knees on the glaring white sand—by the side of the Pacific which had thundered for ages upon the atoll, and still thunders on indifferent to sect or creed.

ENGLEHARDT'S DISCIPLES JOIN HIM IN HIS "PALM TEMPLE."

August Englehardt was at least sincere in his faith and in the observance of its tenets. For days he lived alone, eating nothing but bread fruit and cocoanuts, swimming in the sea or the still lagoon; studying the fauna and flora of his island by day, or lying on the hot beach; by night sleeping in a hollow scooped out of the sand.

Occasionally he saw, or thought he saw, men moving in the cocoa groves, and once when he went to investigate he discovered for a certainty that he was not alone on the island. A number of lithe, naked, dark-skinned men and women ran hastily away. But the natives were few and harmless; apparently, too, they feared if they did not actually worship this great man with the white skin and the shaggy yellow hair who emerged glistening, from the lagoon, or appeared suddenly in the cocoa groves. They kept away from him and were even more exclusive when his companion came.

It may be supposed that Englehardt led a dreary life on Kahakua while awaiting the arrival of his disciples, but if one may judge the student's temperament from his acts it seems more likely that this was the happiest period of his existence on the atoll. He had left the world behind him; he was free. Of the food of his choice he lacked none, and the balmy air of the Pacific, the warm sun of the tropics, and the cool spray of the "combers" were his playthings. At dawn nature feasted his eyes with beauty as the sun, his god, climbed over the horizon, tinted the palm crests with gold, the sea with amber and opal and crimson, and bathed the kneeling figure on the beach with a mantle that was his inspiration. By day Englehardt's joy was that of a dream realized. At sunset the lagoon clasped his god in a broil of molten lava; then came the night, with the great dome of stars, the breeze rustling through the cocoa fronds, and the Pacific chanting like a great organ, lulling him to sleep.

But there was an end to this, and a beginning to disillusion. The vessel which was to have brought his converts dropped anchor in the lagoon. A boat came ashore with four men in it, two of them sailors, the other two Englehardt's stanchest disciples. They were Max Lutzow, at one time director of the well-known Lutzow Orchestra of Berlin, and Heinrich Eukens, a student of Bavaria and a native of Heligoland. The other converts, upon the departure of Englehardt and his eloquence, had received the attention of other sects, and been convinced that Kahakua was full of cannibals, sweltering with fever miasma; in brief, that Englehardt was leading them to death.

It was a great blow to Englehardt, but the die was cast. The vessel sailed away, and he, with Lutzow and Eukens, was left on the island. The two new arrivals were delighted with the appearance of Englehardt. Weeks of life under the sun, in the salt sea, and living upon fruit, had brought him to a state of wonderful physical perfection. His skin was like copper, and against it his yellow hair shone like gold. The two disciples immediately joined him in his method of living. For days theirs was an idyllic state, and they were contented. But an end came. The sudden change had been too much for the less-rugged constitution of Eukens, who contracted a cold, developed fever, and died quite suddenly. He had been given no remedies, as it was contrary to the faith of the sun worshippers.

His companions buried him in the sand. For days they wandered listlessly about the island, the spell of which had been broken. But at length they realized that such an undertaking could not be expected to succeed without suffering.

They began again, and things went well, although the gloom attending the death of Eukens never left them. Lutzow, the musician, developed the physical strength which characterized Englehardt. For a year the two men lived comparatively happily, except for one thing, which is the one ray of humor in the whole history.

It was understood that the world of civilization—art, letters, dress, and diet—had been forgotten, but the genius of Lutzow was something which was all of Lutzow and nothing of Englehardt. Lutzow and his music could not be separated. Donizetti was his favorite, although through the long hours of the idle day he did not forget passages from Wagner, Verdi, Mascagni, Bach, Liszt, Beethoven, and others. Englehardt loved music, but he had a particular aversion to Donizetti and a positive horror of Bizet, who was associated in his mind with "Carmen," who, in turn, was the bête noir of his faith.

Engelhardt tolerated the music as long as he could; then, unable longer to associate with a human musical, he quarreled with Lutzow. It was a bitter quarrel, for the student had hurt the musician to the quick. Eventually the two men became so estranged that Lutzow applied one night for permission to sleep away from the island on the Wesleyan mission cutter from Ulu, which was then in the lagoon.

That night the cutter dragged her moorings and was carried on the tide through the narrows to the open sea. Cross-currents prevented the craft from putting back for two days, during which Lutzow still observant of the tenets of the sun-worshippers' faith, refused to take shelter, and also refused all nourishment that was not fruit. There was no fresh fruit on board, consequently he starved. He lay upon the deck of the cutter, too, for two days and two nights, exposed to a cold, wet wind. Shortly after the cutter put back into the lagoon the musician developed a high temperature. He grew worse, lingered for a week, then died.

He was buried in the sand by Englehardt beside the unfortunate Eukens. The Wesleyan missionaries offered to take Englehardt back to civilization. He flew into a rage, said he owned the island, and forbade them ever to drop anchor in the lagoon of Kahakua again.

So the cutter sailed away to Ulu and Englehardt was left alone in the Palm Temple. For nearly two years more he continued to live the "pure, natural life," but the charm had been completely broken by the death of his two disciples.

Then in 1903 came a drought which reduced the fruit crop. The little left of it was wiped out in the Spring of 1904 by a storm. Englehardt had the alternative of casting in his lot with the natives and eating hogflesh, or sending a request for succor to Ulu or Herbertshohe. He did neither in his stubbornness, and starvation and thirst did their work.

\+ + +

One day a canoe paddled into Herbertshohe, driven by two natives who said the white man was sick and possessed of devils; wandering about Kahakua preaching his doctrine to the trees and frightening the natives. Would the German officials please come and take him away?

A Government launch was sent out with a doctor and a missionary on board. They found Engelhardt in the last stages of malarial delirium. He was taken, screaming protest, aboard the launch, which steamed out of the lagoon and headed for Herbertshohe.

Engelhardt refused all nourishment to the last, refused all medicine, and accused the missionary of interfering with his convictions. He wrought himself up to a great frenzy, fell upon the deck, and was restrained only with difficulty from flinging himself overboard and swimming back to his island. Before the beach had sunk below the horizon the man was dead. Then the launch put back.

Wrapped in a German flag, August Engelhardt, founder and last survivor of the sun worshippers, was laid to rest beside Lutzow and Eukens on the beach at Kahakua.

THE SHATTERED ANGELS.

reason for this. The appeal all art has made in its religious expression has been to perpetuate the spirit, the form, the spiritual purity of the Holy Virgin Mary. Even in the artistic interpretations of Christ, the masculine has been softened by the reflected resemblances to Mary. All religious paintings, pictures, or statues of the figure of Christ are made to convey the spiritual ecstasy of the Holy Virgin. This was a fundamental religious feeling of my own that prevailed when I undertook these two angels."

When I asked him why he destroyed them, he answered in monosyllables, without outward feeling, without any concern, without any bitterness of comment against the meddlers. The Church authorities did not take the initiative; they were pressed into action by quite a different element than they themselves usually encounter in theological discussions. In appearance, and somewhat in quality, Mr. Borglum suggests Paul Bourget.

"I try in my groupings for the massing of subjects, for the strong, mobile, concrete expressions of force in nature. And the spiritual motive always at the sacrifice of the sensational and the dainty."

In his studio are bits of the destroyed angels, a hand, a face, a bit of drapery—all that remains of the broken figures.

The argument is over. It has stirred us to measuring the depths of spiritual interpretation in art.

In literature and poetry the angel has been masculine. Milton makes his angels men. In the plastic arts they are, and always have been—women.

What the District Attorneyship Has Taught Mr. Jerome

While He Cooks a Sunday Breakfast in His Rutgers Street Home He Talks About Human Nature as It Reveals Itself to the Observant Public Prosecutor.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY JEROME IN HIS OFFICE

THE principal effect of my four years as District Attorney has been, I think, to make me more tender-hearted. It is ever so much harder to convict a man after you have learned to know what conviction means to him and how little, on the whole, it benefits anybody."

Mr. Jerome stood suddenly still halfway between the gas stove and the sink, balancing a shining copper pan in his right hand. Musingly he added after a brief pause:

"And yet, when I say my office has made me more tender-hearted I am not thinking of criminals only. No, no—I am thinking of all men. That office, you see, has taught me, among other things, how much all men, the highest and the lowest, the worst and the best, have in common. And do you realize that the kind of people I see the least of are criminals?"

It was Sunday morning. Mr. Jerome was making his own breakfast in the little doll kitchen that forms part of his doll flat at 3 Rutgers Street. The tiny room shone with cleanliness. Above the gas stove glimmered a line of heavy copper pans, silver plated on the inside. Below them was placed another line of French earthen "cassolettes"—brown, flat pans, with bulging sides, looking not unlike the knotted brows of so many bovines. Opposite the stove, an ice chest reaching from ceiling to floor was sunk into the wall. A china closet, well filled, occupied the rest of that wall. Mr. Jerome, to whom Mrs. Jerome has been heard to refer jestingly as "my twelve-thousand-dollar cook," was filling the pan he had in his hand with water. Then he placed it above one of the burners of the gas stove.

"No, the people I see most of are those who prosecute the criminals—bankers, merchants, storekeepers, manufacturers, lawyers, policemen, ministers, professors, literary men, peddlers, rag pickers, and unfortunate wives and daughters and sisters. They all come to me to tell their tales, and I see all of them off their guard—you know, that is the rarest thing in the world; to see anybody—man, woman, or child—when he is not living up to a part and assuming a conscious pose. But I have that opportunity in my office, and—do you know where I go when I want to enjoy myself thoroughly?"

+ + +

Taking a queer-looking knife from a shelf near the sink, Mr. Jerome picked a loaf of bread out of a tin box and began to cut up thin slices.

"I made that knife myself," he said, holding up the instrument for inspection. The handle was of brass and heavier than the blade, which in shape resembled those found on butchers' knives.

"The blade is made of razor steel," explained Mr. Jerome. "And just feel how nicely it lies in the hand."

He handed over the implement after having cut the needed number of slices. Then he lighted a broiler attached to the gas stove and placed the slices carefully on the grill.

"I go to a railroad station," he resumed abruptly. "Whenever I have to travel somewhere I manage to get to the station fifteen or twenty minutes ahead in order to get a good look at the people coming and going. Every one of them is off his guard on one side at least. They are so busy getting their tickets, checking their baggage, arranging for parlor car seats and buying the latest papers, that they do not stop once to recall that somebody may be observing them. Really, it would be hard to tell whether I have learned most about human nature in stations or in my office—"

The water in the pan was boiling briskly. With a quick motion Mr. Jerome dropped two eggs into the water. Then he lifted the pan aside and placed it on an asbestos tray.

"That's my way of cooking eggs—it's the only rational and satisfactory way. I leave the eggs in the boiling water till I am ready with the rest of the breakfast, whether it be ten or twenty minutes. I don't have to watch them, and I know they will not be hard. Nor will they be too soft. You'll see when I open them that the white of the egg is just like thick cream. And as to the flavor—well, you have to taste that to appreciate it."

Then he began to pick the bread slices, now golden brown in color, out of the broiler. Above one of the lighted burners rested an asbestos tray, with a plate on top of it and another plate turned upside down as cover. As soon as he had taken out a slice of bread and buttered it Mr. Jerome put it under cover on the plate to keep it warm.

"I think I've got everything down pretty fine," he remarked with a triumphant smile. "Do you want the coffee weak or strong?"

He was pouring hot water through a French coffee cooker of copper. The coffee made, he began to take dishes out of the china closet and carry them through a narrow hallway into the dining room, the walls of which were decorated with some of the original cartoons drawn by Bush for the campaign of 1903. Finally the table was laid, and host and guest sat down opposite each other at the round dining table of miniature size standing in the centre of the room.

+ + +

"But to get back to my office," Mr. Jerome began again, munching at a banana he had just peeled. "People have the foolish idea that every man is either bad or good—they must label him this way or that. If a man is straight in most ways, he must be straight in every way, they think. And if he be found to have an oblique trend in some one way they just set him down as bad clear through. My office has shown me the folly of that attitude, for one thing. A man may be crooked in some one thing—heredity or surroundings or pure physical weakness may produce an obliquity in some one direction—and yet he may be as straight as anybody in every other way. And let me tell you right here that physical weakness has more to do with crime than anything else—and that's the worst part of it. It is the part that makes the man who knows tender, and which makes him doubt the wisdom of punishing. Of course, you know—"

Mr. Jerome broke off for a moment to hold up the glass into which he had broken the eggs. They were all that he had promised—the most delicious looking eggs that the visitor had ever seen. And the taste—why, anybody who has not eaten eggs cooked in that way can never know.

'Of course," Mr. Jerome picked up the thread of his discourse once more, "it is absolutely necessary to punish under existing circumstances. It is a question of protection more than anything else. It has to be done, but—you know, I am not talking of reformatories and such institutions now, but of prisons and penitentiaries—to punish in the ordinary way is damnable cruelty, and nothing else. In all my long experience as lawyer, as Judge, and as Prosecuting Attorney, I have known of one man only who benefited by being sent to jail. He straightened out and became a man. All the others have gone from bad to worse, as far as I have been able to follow them. And yet we have to send them to jail. It would mean too much of an outlay to send them all to reformatories, and then, even if we did, and if we spent the money needed to build up their health and make them able to care for themselves—why, after a while the politicians would get hold of the money and the institutions would go to waste, and there we would be again. So we have to go on and punish."

+ + +

The coffee was steaming in the cups. Mr. Jerome leaned back in his chair, picked a cigarette from an iron receptacle on the cover of which he had, with his own hands, etched a couple of oak leaves.

"Yes, I made the box, too, in my workshop out at Lakeville," he replied to a question. "And I etched that steel plate nailed on the side of the bookcase over there. Look at the inscription."

The visitor got up and read the golden script that looked like arabesque:

"Thy lot or portion in life is seeking after thee, therefore be at rest from seeking after it."

"Don't know it," admitted the visitor.

"The Calif Ali—one of Mohammed's successors," explained the District Attorney. "Those simple words mean a good deal to me. They have, in fact, had an immense influence on my whole life. They and some verses by Emerson—you find them on another plate in the front room—you know, the lines beginning 'Fear not, then, thou child infirm.'

"Well, those words are good and true for such as you and me, but how about the many that come sick and weak and worm-eaten into this world? I said that physical weakness is responsible for more crime than anything else. Look around you here on the east side—and you know, I have come to think this part of the town as good as any. See the weaklings that sneak around the streets with the mark of inefficiency stamped on them from their birth. We are told that they are loafers, that they are lazy and unwilling. They got nowhere in school, they get nowhere out of school. They are weak, man—weak at the core, and to them hard work is a torture. It is not a question of willing, it is one of being able. You and I are different—inherited tendencies and home influences and school influences and reading and thinking have combined to make us wholly different beings from those I am now referring to. We have to work—it is not a question of money, it is a question of restless, inherent energy that drives us to be doing something. But those weak ones—why should they work if they did not have to, and how can they work merely because they have to? Theirs is the hardest work—the work that breaks backs and bends heads and rounds shoulders. When they have been at it for a few minutes cold perspiration is streaming down their faces, their hearts are beating unbearably, and every nerve is quivering. Do you wonder that they rather beg or steal or do anything but work at the kind of work that is open to them? That class makes more criminals than any other that exists in society. And how can we judge them? How can we fail to grow tender of heart toward them? And yet we have to punish them."

Mr. Jerome followed with his eyes a puff of smoke he had just blown toward the ceiling.

"Another class that furnishes our criminals is made up of those who possess too much strength and vitality. Have you ever watched an Irish driver or some skilled laborer, making his way through these east side streets? He moves along like a giant among so many dwarfs. Hard labor is a play to him. What does he care if work be piled on him from morn till night? He has always some energy left. I saw the other day a man of that kind—a six-foot Irishman with a face that fairly glowed with health and good humor—seize hold of the long beard of a passing old Jew and pull it with a mocking laugh. The man did not mean to do anything wrong, or to either hurt or offend. He was wholly unconscious of the fact that he had just offered an unforgivable ritualistic insult to a man that had not said a word or done a thing to deserve anything of the kind. The man was nearly lynched. Only his superb self-confidence and lordly contempt for the bodily weakness of his antagonists saved him. He had waved them aside and passed out of sight laughingly before they were aware of his intention. That man was incapable of crime. Hard work does not scare him. Yet men of his kind are often found at the bar. In anger, or under the influence of liquor, they strike a blow some day without notion of the strength that gives force to that blow. And in a second they find themselves confronted with a serious criminal charge. Those men are not bad at heart—they are not at all criminals in the accepted sense of the word. You know, I hope, that I am now wholly disregarding those that we call professional criminals. They are a comparatively small group. They are in the game fully aware of its dangers, its risks, its attractions, and its advantages. The men of that class are helpless and hopeless. The only right thing for society to do would be to send each one of them to prison for lifetime as the best means of ridding itself of them. They are a public nuisance."

The speaker lapsed into silence that remained unbroken for a couple of minutes, during which he puffed incessantly at his cigarette.

"It is strange," he said at last, a queer smile lighting up his eyes; "do you know, I can get even that class of men to tell the truth—that is, as far as it is in them to tell the truth, for their natures are so bent and twisted that even when they want to the worst way they are unable to keep away completely from falsehood. But they will give me their confidence. If I only get a chance to talk straight to them they seem to understand that even they will get a square deal from me. I remember one, a woman—oh, well, it would be too long a story. But it makes me think of something."

+ + +

Again Mr. Jerome remained silent and slightly smiling to himself for a while. Then he said:

"They think I am a sort of a riddle, a deep mystery, a highly complex phenomenon. They—the politicians and the editors, for instance—cannot make me out. Well, all of us are complex enough, but at the same time—my nature is really extremely simple in its make-up. I believe in elementary virtues, in old-fashioned, Sunday school, puritanical virtues—the virtues enjoined by the Ten Commandments. There is an old hymn that has for its refrain: 'He died to make men good.' Good—that is the word. We should all strive to be good, to do right, to refrain from lying and stealing and murdering. It is all so simple—not at all a question of intricate policies. You know, I am talking politics now?"

The speaker laughed heartily.

"The Ten Commandments might serve as a good party platform—as good as any one of those generally offered by parties and candidates. Problems exist that have to be solved by statesmanship. I know it. But let me tell you they are few in number. Look at the street in front of us—see the space between the street car tracks. Pockets for the gathering of dust and germs, that's what you find there. Is it a question of statesmanship that the railroad companies should be made to keep the tracks and the space between them in proper order? Look at our judicial appointments—is it a question of statesmanship that the men selected for the bench should be able and honest and equipped with some feeling for their fellow-men? Look at our public men—is it a question of intricate and highfalutin statesmanship that they should be clean and straight in every way?

"I had a talk with a pretty prominent politician the other day. We were speaking of another man in politics—a public officer, in fact. My friend the politician said: 'Oh, he gambles a little and he visits houses that are not of the nicest, but what the dick-

How Our Men of Wealth Give Away Millions

Each Has His Almoner Who Annually Dispenses a Fortune in the Cause of Philanthropy--Different Men Have Their Different Methods--Benefactions of Miss Gould and Mrs. Sage.

IF you had annually $1,000,000 or so to spare and wanted to balance your account with the world by giving it away, how would you go about the task?

Of the many hundred men and women in the United States whose fortunes aspire toward seven, eight, and nine figures, several notable ones have put this question seriously to themselves, and have answered it by going as gravely about the business of giving away money wisely as they went about its accumulation. And a mighty business it has become, this business of philanthropy, when it is remembered that in America—the domain of the dollar no more than of the helping hand—upward of $80,000,000 a year is given away, of which shining Niagara $40,000,000 rise in New York and empty thence into the ever-widening sea of want.

Spacious as are these figures, it is prophesied by the Charity Organization Society that the mighty stream will be swollen beyond the average this year, sequential to several cloud-bursting donations made by individual persons. But how, to repeat, do our men of millions give away their money? First handed and as the mood strikes them, or methodically? Methodically, in a word, and with such painstaking care that many call but few are chosen as objects of wholesale charity.

+ + +

Riches would seem more embarrassing than the average person would dream of, judging from the statement of a leading financier to the effect that he did not believe any man in comfortable circumstances would covet millions if he knew the racking responsibilities entailed. This great giver pays an almoner and corps of assistants some $15,000 a year simply to examine into the enormous number of applications which continually assail and beseech him, by post and by person. And he is only one of many wealthy men who maintain almoners, under the name of special secretaries, in their employ. Recently John D. Rockefeller further illustrated the responsibility of the almoner when he pronounced it easier to accumulate a fortune than to give it away with satisfactory results. Which tersely defines the importance of such special charity agents, of whom there are six or seven in this city, engaged in giving away many, many millions a year.

As is well known, Andrew Carnegie maintains a special bureau or corporation, organized under the New Jersey laws, for the sole purpose of looking into the applications directed to him. Over in Hoboken, where this bureau has its being, are five men who act as Directors of this unique private trust company. Yet while their business is to carry out the wishes of the wealthy ironmaster, the grain is sorted from the chaff before it reaches him. And how?

First, it may be answered, nearly all Carnegie donations are unsolicited, being, it is said, largely the result of deductions drawn from reading the newspapers. System is the watchword in the big Fifth Avenue mansion overlooking Central Park. Arriving in his study of a morning the first thing the master of the house does is to skim through the morning journals. He is a rapid reader, and as his interests are catholic, it is well that he is, for very little escapes his eye. He makes a few mental notes as he reads and is presently dictating to his secretary the direct results of his newspaper perusals.

+ + +

His secretary, James Bertram, may be called his chief almoner, for nothing ever reaches Mr. Carnegie but passes first through his hands. "Anything new this morning, Bertram?" he will ask when the preliminary dictation is finished.

"Nothing particular," may be the reply. "You will find several organ requests in that pile which appear to be worth looking into, and here is a letter from a Western town regarding a library which is too much of a burden on the taxpayers. Here are a few personal letters for you, also." This with Scotch directness and military brevity, as Mr. Carnegie breaks the seal of the topmost missive. Very few letters are addressed to Mr. Carnegie which are not opened by his secretary who, with the true secretarial instinct, seems able to smell a missive which is intended for the eye of his employer only.

Presently a letter from a Southern city is reached which states that the authorities have decided to reject his offer of a library because of a depleted treasury. He wrinkles his brow in a shadow of vexation, and dictates a reply courteous and regretful, but emphasizes the stereotyped conditions which govern in such cases.

Likely enough when the leading men of such a town receive such an answer they will wonder where the sting is that they so distinctly feel and yet cannot exactly locate. He of Skibo and Fifth Avenue can say a great deal in a few words, and his vexation is often implied in a sentence as velvety as the paw of a purring cat.

Most of the letters relate to gifts of organs or library endowments, accomplished or to come. A dozen library and organ requests are averaged every day.

Meanwhile many visitors have arrived and been shown into the waiting room, that is, such visitors as have satisfied the liveried attendant of their worthiness. When Secretary Bertram issues from the study and enters the waiting room his practised eye may tell him that a woman caller represents a religious society and seeks assistance for one of its pet charities. He asks her business, and after she has vainly declared the necessity of her seeing the philanthropist in person, she tells the patient listener that she wants $500 for a proposed hospital for homeless cats, or of something of the kind. The lady is somewhat taken aback by the abrupt dismissal that follows, but Bertram is already talking to a committeeman from a distant city which has been promised a library. He is asked to wait a moment. Of the other visitors, one may want an autograph and the other may be a beggar pure and simple, whose gentlemanly appearance and speech have deceived the Cerberus below. Directly the shady sheep are cut out from the flock and sent down to the front door, where the lady will be arguing with a stolid footman about seeing the mistress if the master of the house is engaged.

Upward of $100,000,000 has already passed in this way under the eye of Secretary Bertram and out through the hands of the Hoboken bureaus to beneficiaries as follows: United States, $87,517,472; Scotland, $17,713,750; Holland, $1,750,000; England and Wales, $1,554,000; Canada, $1,016,000; Ireland, $365,000; Cuba, $252,000, and miscellaneous contributions amounting to some $5,000,000.

Only less picturesque than the Carnegie system is that of John D. Rockefeller, whose Bertram is Starr J. Murphy. He and his associates have offices in the Standard Oil Building, which, by the way, is crowded with Rockefeller money-makers directing the vast enterprises arrayed under the general heading of Standard Oil.

Of the huge charitable disbursements made by its presiding genius every penny passes at one time or another under the notice of Starr J. Murphy, who, wise in human ways and wiles, seldom or never allows golden honey to trickle past him to the drones in the social hive.

His department is organized as well and heedfully as any of the surrounding departments through which money is made. His system of charity is iron-clad. Everything must follow a prescribed course. Following the example of his employer, he absolutely refuses to discuss in advance any case of prospective charity. Briefly explaining the situation, he said:

"It would be neither politic nor wise to divulge the names of any beneficiaries other than public institutions. As a matter of fact, a great many of our charities are personal—donations which it were unkind to the recipients to specify. We are kept busy attending to a large number of daily applicants, and if it were known just what attitude Mr. Rockefeller takes in such matters we would be literally overrun with applicants for aid."

+ + +

Prior to his advent as head of the Rockefeller bureau, a former Baptist minister, the Rev. Frederick T. Gates, organized the department and established it on a business basis. According to a story which reveals the varied character of the appeals which reach the rich, there was recently referred to the Rockefeller charity bureau the question of favoring the request of an iron-mining company to take over a troublesome mortgage. The bureau examined the case as thoroughly as though it had been an appeal for $10, and Charity Manager Gates reported in favor of assuming the mortgage. His advice being followed, the mining company was saved, and the Rockefeller profit on the transaction was a round $3,000,000.

Under his successor every begging communication addressed to John D. Rockefeller is referred to the charity bureau. All such communications are read. But most of them are ignored. When, however, a communication creates a favorable impression a thorough investigation is begun, often necessitating a lengthy journey on the part of some member of the bureau. No expense is spared to get at the facts.

It is recounted that an Ohio society leader recently wrote the oil magnate for aid in a benevolent enterprise. Several days later a taciturn man was making first-hand inquiries in the Ohio city regarding the enterprise, as a result of which the lady was presently informed that an adequate sum would be advanced toward it.

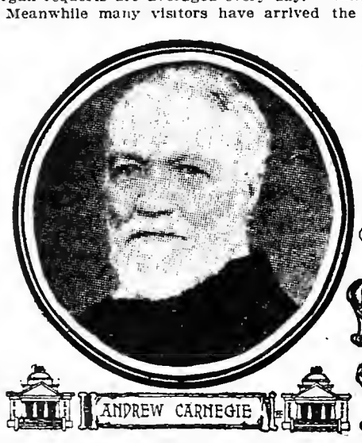
As an example of the profound secrecy which governs this bureau in its investigations an amusing story is told of two rival movements to start a female college in the Middle West. One of them secured an earlier start by means of a secret donation from Mr. Rockefeller, and it was not for some time that the rival institution understood why its appeals for aid from the same source were met with silence. Everybody knows that the Chicago University is a pampered beneficiary of John D. Rockefeller. But no one save himself and his chief almoner knows the aggregate sums so distributed. Besides the 20,000,000-odd dollars given the Chicago University, $6,000,000 to Rush Medical College, $1,375,000 to Barnard, $1,000,000 each to Harvard, the Baptist Missionary Fund, and the Southern Educational Fund, approximately $10,000,000 have been sown where only the sower and his charity manager can directly trace them.

+ + +

Miss Helen Gould, with the intelligent assistance of Miss Elizabeth Altman, annually disburses $500,000 in charity. Probably Miss Gould supports directly and indirectly more charities than any person living. This is conceded by the Charity Organization Society. While it does not mean that she gives away such sums as are recorded of the Rockefeller and Carnegie charities, on the best authority her donations annually reach five hundred or more beneficiaries, very few of whom are aware of even the existence of Miss Altman. Yet to her most of them may return thanks.

+ + +

Miss Altman probably receives $6,000 a year, and, considering her responsibility and the amount of work she manages to accomplish, she earns her salary. For Miss Altman is the examining and directing energy of nearly all the endowments and donations made by Miss Gould. She it is who reads the thousands of begging letters directed to her employer, only one in a hundred of which ever passes beyond the secretary. Consequently the fate of nearly every applicant may be said to rest with Miss Altman. A favorable word from her means generally the granting of an appeal and very often her disapproval of the feasibility of a proposed benevolence is its death warrant so far as aid from this source is concerned.



ANDREW CARNEGIE

MISS HELEN M. GOULD

JACOB H. SCHIFF

Miss Altman is a Vassar graduate, and first met her present employer some seven years ago when Miss Gould was visiting the college. Since then she has been an active agent in giving away nearly $4,000,000. Every check signed by Miss Gould is made out by her secretary.

+ + +

Some days an average of two hundred begging letters are received and read by this busy almoner, and an astonishing sameness characterizes most of them. Were she given to talking you might believe with her that there are only a few primal tales of woe in the world, and upon those the changes are rung over and over again in the same key by thousands of charity applicants. In view of which, it is by no means surprising that a large percentage of such letters are consigned to the ample waste baskets awaiting their reception on both sides of her desk. During one week recently Miss Gould—or rather her secretary—received applications for sums of money aggregating nearly $2,000,000.

Partly eclipsed by his commanding position as a trust organizer is the position of J. Pierpont Morgan as a giver of money. But notwithstanding the secrecy he enjoins in all his benevolences, it is conservatively estimated that he disburses close on half a million dollars annually in direct charities and in purchasing objects of art. His right hand in such matters is C. W. King, for twelve years his confidential secretary.

While, if we except such notable philanthropies as the $1,000,000 Lying-In Hospital; $500,000 for the New York Trade School, $1,000,000 to Harvard, $500,000 for the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, $500,000 for the Loomis Hospital, and some $2,000,000 in smaller donations, he confines himself to buying art treasures, leaving individual cases to his wife, Mr. Morgan is known to give away a considerable total every year to personal applicants.

+ + +

Sitting in his private office, in plain view of all who enter the banking house of which he is the head, he was approached not long ago by a man deeply interested in the success of a trade school. His story told, the visitor was dismissed with a curt good-day, leaving every vestige of hope behind. Within a fortnight, to his mingled surprise and pleasure, he received a letter asking him to call again, which he did with a glow of anticipation.

+ + +

But, to his perplexity and disappointment, his second reception was hardly more cordial than the first. From five thousand to three, then to two, and finally to one his expectations fell, until the great financier tersely expressed his interest in the charity by volunteering to assist it. The visitor expressed his thanks, but with a lingering shade of disappointment, in view of his original hopes, when Mr. Morgan, writing on a slip of paper, added that he had inquired pretty thoroughly into the work, and at the same time handed over the slip. It was a contribution of $100,000.

+ + +

Including the million-dollar Garland collection of porcelains and other gifts to the Metropolitan Museum, Mr. Morgan has spent nearly $15,000,000 in art treasures, most of which have been purchased on the advice, it is said, of Sir Purdon Clarke. To even enumerate and describe these purchases would require a volume. But what is more germane, the general belief is that most of them will eventually belong to the city, either in the form of a special museum or by being distributed among existing galleries and museums. Never was a man so catholic in his tastes. He buys a cameo with the same zest as a painting by Titian. He loves to acquire a gold necklace from a Phoenician tomb along with a piece of tapestry from a French château. A Marie Antoinette bedroom set has as much charm for him as an illuminated missal or a priceless Caxton. He is as hungry for a Capo di Monte flagon as for a vase from the Ming Emperors—no form of art is neglected by him, none despised, and it is this remarkable catholicity that makes his houses delightful in their surprises, surprising in their delights.

+ + +

An intimate friend, dropping in at the Morgan town house one day not long ago, was shown into the library where he began idly turning the pages of a book. Presently a faded letter fluttered to the floor. Upon examining it the eyes of the caller began to widen with surprise. For the letter, evidently forgotten by its owner, was the original invitation extended the commanders at Yorktown to meet for the purpose of considering terms for ending the Revolutionary War—the most important document extant connected with the surrender of Cornwallis, and worth perhaps $10,000.

In the case of Russell Sage aims and the man seem widely divergent. He is the last person to whom one would look for an item not nominated in the bond. But his wife is diligent in doing good. She is an active member of several boards for charitable work, and concerns herself with many individual cases. Breakfast and business—charitable business—are daily combined in the Sage household by the reading of such mail as reaches there on the early morning delivery.

One morning recently, according to a family acquaintance, a letter arrived from a charity organization sorely in need of $5,000. Mrs. Sage read the letter aloud, and having previously inquired into the object for which the money was intended, explained it to her husband in detail, ending with a suggestion that they give the money.

Mr. Sage said nothing. But, breakfast over, he sought the library and wrote out a check for the amount asked. Handing it to his wife, he cautioned her to get the check cashed herself, and to give the actual money instead of any paper with his name written thereon.

+ + +

Asked to name the best—wisest—philanthropists of his acquaintance, a manager of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Association of New York, who has spent twenty years in gathering and distributing large sums toward charity, promptly mentioned Jacob H. Schiff, James Speyer, and Morris K. Jesup. This classification was confined to general charitable and philanthropic donations made in the most judicious manner. Of the trio, the head of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. was declared a model philanthropist as defined by his generosity, the way in which it is performed, and his admirable discrimination.

His methods of giving are simple and impersonal, and are rarely studied long. He is easily approached on behalf of charity, and seldom fails to respond when the object is a worthy one. This same charity manager instanced an experience he had had in calling on Mr. Schiff in behalf of a person whose name began with the letter L. A secretary went to a cabinet and extracted a package of individual reports all beginning with the letter—records of hundreds of cases relieved by him. According to his means, Jacob Schiff is credited with giving more to charity, at least to more causes, than any other man living.

If Darius O. Mills, whose hotels are among the most successful charitable institutions in existence, has a governing motto in his philanthropies, it is probably a wish to help those who wish to help themselves. On the other hand, Charles M. Schwab, whose name is connected with no greatly advertised charities, gives liberally, and without asking questions, to such needy persons as come under his eye. His magnificent mansion, now approaching completion in this city, will ultimately, it is announced, revert to the city as an art gallery or hospital. Meanwhile it is no uncommon sight to see the President of the Bethlehem Steel Company slip a shining gold coin to a mendicant, as, in fact, he is said to carry habitually a number of such coins for that specific purpose.

+ + +

When Andrew Carnegie is at home a frequent caller at the great Ninety-first Street mansion is the former head of the United States Steel Corporation. As often as otherwise the subject under friendly discussion at such times is the well-directed giving of money—a matter in which their views do not always coincide. Perhaps, as occasionally happens, the argument has waxed warm over their respective theories, and host and guest will, for the sake of harmony, adjourn to the music room, the former leading the way to the immense pipe organ before which the latter, a master of the instrument, will seat himself. What shall be the tune? He to whom the question is addressed, having dropped into a chair in front of the fireplace, smiles without answering, and such a mundane thing as money is presently forgotten in the thrilling Scotch melodies that thunder through the great house. Or are money and its wise distribution forgotten by the bowed figure sitting so quietly before the fire? Only he himself—the greatest giver of them all—may answer as he gazes abstractedly into the glowing coals, dreaming, dreaming, dreaming.

ens has the public got to do with that? That's the man's private business, I should think.'

"'Look here,' I said. 'Supposing that man was to propose to your daughter?'

"'My, but that's quite another thing,' exclaimed my friend.

"'Is it?' I said. 'And supposing he were your son?'

"My friend looked very much puzzled as he repeated: 'My son?'

"'Put it another way,' I said. 'Supposing your son were doing what he is doing? How would you like that? Would you not give anything, do anything, to keep your son from such ways?'

"'Well, our sons—our own families—that is such a different matter entirely,' he replied, scratching his head as if I had been propounding some trick question.

"Well, let me tell you what I think—just as I told him then—it is not different at all. The men that are to govern this city, to handle and shape our public affairs, should be just as clean and true and—mark the word, for I have used it before, and I come back to it always—as good as we would have our own sons and daughters, our sons-in-law and daughters-in-law, be. Elementary virtues—believe me—they are the virtues most wanted in public as in private life. If we can get them, the store of statesmanship that is needed will be thrown in on the side, I think."

Mr. Jerome rose and began to clear off the table.

"Do you know"—he turned with an empty coffee cup in each hand—"I grow more tender-hearted every day toward those who are in the rear and must stay there, and more stern in my demands on those who want to lead." E. B.

Movement to Preserve Relics of Prehistoric America

CONGRESS at its next session will be asked to pass a measure placing under the care and custody of the Secretary of the Interior all the historic and prehistoric ruins, monuments, archaeological objects, and other antiquities on the public lands of the United States, to the end that they may be preserved from despoliation by ignorant relic hunters, and only opened to investigation by reputable scientists associated with educational institutions, whose researches shall be carefully recorded and their accumulated knowledge stored in the United States National Museum. These relics are priceless when secured by proper scientific methods, and of comparatively little value when scattered about in museums and private collections without accompanying records. The proposed bill authorizes the Secretary to make withdrawals of such lands as contain these works of prehistoric man, and persons who shall without permission appropriate, injure, or destroy any public property thereon will be subject to fine and imprisonment.

This legislation is aimed at those soulless mercenaries who have for years past carried on an extensive traffic in relics from the ruins of the cliff dwellings and pueblos which are scattered in great profusion over the semi-arid regions of the Southwest. At the last session of Congress a bill of this nature was introduced in the Senate and referred to the House Committee on Public Lands, which reported it back in amended form; but the measure was crowded off the calendar by more pressing matters and final action deferred. The committee, in submitting the amendment, urged the adoption of such a law for the reason that "these ruins have been frequently mutilated by people seeking the relics for the purpose of selling them. Such excavations destroy the valuable evidence contained in the ruins themselves and prevent a careful and scientific investigation by representatives of public institutions interested in archaeology." Appended to the report of the committee was a memorandum prepared by Prof. Edgar L. Hewitt for the Commissioner of the General Land Office, showing the character and extent of the ruins in the various districts which it is proposed to set aside for scientific exploration.

Extensive investigations have already been made in parts of this region, but there are large areas practically untouched. The Smithsonian Institution at Washington, the American Museum of Natural History, New York; the Peabody Museum of Harvard University, and other institutions and universities have large collections of relics, and have at various times sent out expeditions to explore this country so rich in historical treasures. Such men as Dr. Fewkes of the Bureau of American Ethnology, Dr. Hough of the National Museum, Mr. Bandelier of the American Museum of Natural History, and many others perhaps equally famous have contributed most valuable information on the subject, and the work of investigation is still going on. Dr. Pepper of New York is now preparing a detailed report concerning his own recent discoveries.

Who were the cliff dwellers? Where did they come from? Why, after building such edifices and strongholds, did they abandon what must have been the labor of generations? These are questions to which no adequate answers have yet been vouchsafed. The antiquity of the Cave Men and the length of time they occupied their eyrie homes are shrouded in mystery. Their habitations may be and probably are, some of them, a thousand or more years old. There is no authentic record or even tradition of this strange people. The earliest Spanish adventurers in their search for gold penetrated into this region, but found only the communistic pueblos, the adobe houses of the migratory tribes whose remnants still survive in the remote corners of the southwest country. The cliff dwellings were even then deserted and crumbling to pieces, and the native Indians superstitiously avoided them.

+ + +

The great basins of the Rio Grande, the San Juan, the Little Colorado, and the Gila, says Prof. Hewitt, constitute the four great seats of prehistoric culture of the so-called pueblo region. The remains of this ancient culture are scattered extensively over these four areas, in Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, and Colorado. They are of three principal types, viz., pueblo ruins, cliff houses, and cavate dwellings, with their accompanying burial mounds, kivas, and shrines. The "White House," situated in the Cañon de Chelle District, is a striking example of the Cliff Dwellers' constructive genius. "Cliff Palace" is justly one of the most famous works of prehistoric man in existence. It is described by Chapin in his volume of travels.

From a distance it strikes one as being the ruins of a great palace erected by some powerful chieftain of the lost people. It occupied a great space under a grand oval cliff, appearing like a demolished fortress, with ramparts, bastions, and dismantled towers. The stones in front have broken away, but behind them rise the walls of a second story, and in the rear of these, in under the dark cavern, stands a third tier of masonry. Still further back in the gloomy recess, little houses rest on upper ledges. The burial place of the clan was down under the rear of the cave.

The space occupied by the building is 425 feet long, 80 feet high in front, and 80 feet deep in the centre. One hundred and twenty-four rooms have been traced out on the ground floor. There were originally seven stories, so that a thousand persons may have easily lived within its confines. There are towers and circular rooms, square and rectangular inclosures, all with a seeming symmetry.

The material used in all of the cliff houses was of the same composition as the surrounding cliffs, whatever that might be. The stones of the walls of the buildings give evidence of having been rudely faced, probably by stone hatchets such as have been found in great quantity there. The mortar was apparently made from the fine alkaline detritus of the cliffs, and some walls were plastered with material from the nearby river beds. Floors were made of sills of cedar, willow sticks were then laid over, and the whole was covered with a muddy plaster.

A peculiar feature of these habitations was the absence of doors. In some cases a few of the rooms in the larger structures had doors, but mostly the only means of access was through a hole in the roof above. A community which could huddle together in such small, unventilated quarters, which buried its dead under the floors or in the rear of its caves, could scarcely have attained a high ideal of refinement. Yet the pottery and rude paintings that have been found indicate a temperament not altogether inartistic. Specimens of bowls, jars, needles, baskets, cloth, and matting are abundant, besides skeletons and bones and a few dried-up mummies. Sandals, beads, jugs filled with corn and squash seeds, and innumerable implements of war, the chase, and domestic life are frequently uncovered. Corncobs and corn kernels have been found imbedded in the plaster in the walls. It is known that the cliff dwellers raised beans and squash and that the turkey was among their domestic animals.

The Men of the Cliff have long since disappeared, and we know very little about them. It is quite generally held that the Moqui Indians, and perhaps some other tribes who now inhabit that region, are their direct descendants, but, after all, this is mere conjecture. Future explorations may throw positive light on the subject, and it is the earnest desire of archaeologists and scientists that governmental protection be thrown around the antiquities that still exist, to the end that nothing may be lost or destroyed which will contribute to the advancement of human knowledge.

Want Colleges to Play Football with Feet, Not Hands

England Sends Team of Association Players to This Country to Introduce New Style of Game Which Will Eliminate Present Objectionable Features.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S plea for the elimination of brutality in college football has received support from Secretary of War W. H. Taft, President Eliot of Harvard University, and many heads of the universities and colleges throughout the country. To accomplish the much-needed reform in the sport the President held a conference at the White House which was attended by Prof. J. B. Fine of Princeton, head coach Reid of Harvard, and Walter Camp of Yale. At the conference the entire subject of the discussion was the elimination of roughness in the game and the modification of the present playing rules.

The visit of the English Pilgrim Association football team at this time may have an important bearing on the sport. The British aggregation is composed of the leading English and Scotch exponents of the game, and every member of the team is an amateur in the strictest sense of the word. Their mission to America is to introduce association football to the American public, more particularly to our leading colleges, with a view to its adoption in place of the present modified Rugby game. The project has the support of Sir Alfred Harmsworth, Sir Ernest Cecil Cochrane, Sir Charles Kirkpatrick, and Charles Murray. The three latter named are now in this country and identified with the Pilgrims' tour.

During last season 21 deaths were recorded from injuries received on the football field, and over 200 players were more or less seriously injured, many being crippled for life, though it is true that most of the serious accidents happened to ill-prepared players. This appalling casualty list appealed to the leaders of college football, and a determined effort was decided upon to adopt heroic measures, which would minimize the dangers of the game.

+ + +

As in the recent peace negotiations between Japan and Russia, President Roosevelt took the initiative and invited several of the leading college athletic lights to Washington for a conference. That this is no new idea of the President is shown by the speech delivered by him at the Harvard Alumni meeting last June, when he devoted a part of his long address to college athletics, saying in regard to football:

"I believe in outdoor games, and I do not mind in the least that they are rough games, or that those who take part in them are occasionally injured. I have no sympathy whatsoever with the overwrought sentimentality which would keep a young man in cotton wool, and I have a hearty contempt for him if he counts a broken arm or collarbone as of serious consequence when balanced against the chance of showing that he possesses hardihood, physical address, and courage.

"But when these injuries are inflicted by others, either wantonly or of set design, we are confronted with a question, not of damage to one man's body, but of damage to another man's character. Brutality in playing a game should awaken the heartiest and most plainly shown contempt for the player guilty of it, especially if this brutality is coupled with a low cunning in committing it without getting caught by the umpire. I hope to see both graduate and undergraduate opinion come to scorn such a man as one guilty of base and dishonorable action, who has no place in the regard of gallant and upright men."

With the desire to place college football on a higher and less dangerous plane, the British authorities believe the time is ripe for the introduction of Association football, which during the past decade in England has practically driven out the Rugby game.

+ + +

The Association game presents many attractive features both from the viewpoint of player and spectator. It is directly opposed to the Rugby game. The team consists of eleven players—a goal keeper, two backs, three half backs, and five forwards, two on the right wing, two on the left wing, and one in the centre. No player except the goal keeper may use his hands when the ball, which is round, not oval, is in play, and a ball must be kicked under, not over, the bar of the goal posts. A player may use any part of his anatomy except his arms and hands in propelling the ball. He is offside, however, when there is no opponent except the goal keeper between him and the goal and he is in front of the goal. Interference of any nature when not in possession of the ball is a foul, as is tripping or handling the ball.

The forwards when "dribbling" keep the ball at their feet and must not kick it even a couple of yards in front of them except, of course, when passing it to another player of their team. The backs should be able to kick the ball without ever making a mistake, with either foot, from any angle, on the fly, the bound, or the volley. The centre forward should be able to put any kind of "English" on the ball with either foot; should be master of kicking a swift, low, raking shot, or one that will curve either way.

These are the fundamentals of the Association game which the visiting English players hope to introduce to supersede the American Rugby game in general favor, and eventually lead to great international matches eclipsing in interest any of the great amateur sporting events of the year.

American football is an evolution of English Rugby. The changes in the rules came about gradually, and naturally, because the Americans, having no traditions to fall back upon in cases of controversy, were compelled to establish their own definite playing code. So it was that the fundamentals even were altered, or, according to the American contention, improved.

+ + +

The game as played now is almost exactly the opposite of Association, which must not be confused with English Rugby. In the American game the ball is carried nearly all the time, possession of it in the scrimmage being eagerly sought for. Interference for the runner is another important element in the game. Both of these features are considered scandalous by the devotess of Association, and "interference" is also impossible in English Rugby. Kicking in the college game is used principally to work within striking distance for a touch-down, to rest the line and backs, and for other strategic purposes. Lovers of American football believe that just these points of differences from the Association game have put the college game where it is, and will keep it there, not to the exclusion of Association, however, which they believe will serve a purpose entirely of its own.

College coaches naturally give the American game the preference over English Association. While admitting the many advantages of the Association game they do not seriously consider the possibility of a displacement of the present college game.

One of the most enthusiastic promoters of Association football in this country is Charles H. Murray, who is Associate Director of Sir Alfred Harmsworth's many publications in England. He is the financial backer of the present tour of the English Pilgrims, and is traveling with the team in this country. For several years he has devoted considerable time and expense to his endeavors to popularize the sport. His present experiment will cost him fully $10,000, but he considers the money well spent if he accomplishes his object.

+ + +

So eager is he to promote international Association football matches that he proposes to furnish the leading American colleges with the services of the most expert coaches in England free of cost, whose duties will be to give instruction to the students in the Association game. He is willing to spend $25,000 to introduce the sport into American colleges. In addition to being one of the foremost business men in the great English metropolis, he is a recognized authority on the game, and commands the support of the leaders of British sport. His wife is also an enthusiast, and being wealthy in her own right, is willing to lend all the necessary personal aid and financial assistance to further her husband's pet schems.

The British football team has made a remarkable tour in this country, playing matches in Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, Berlin, St. Louis, Detroit, Chicago, and Philadelphia.

The team will play against an all-New York team on the American League Ball Park next Saturday, when the local lovers of football will have an opportunity of judging the relative merits of the English Association and American college games.

Lady Kirkpatrick, wife of the goalkeeper of the Pilgrims, is bitter in her denunciations of the college game. By a curious coincidence the very worst she had been taught to believe was possible in the American game happened at the first game she witnessed in this country. When one of the players was carried off the field with a broken leg she arose excitedly from her seat in the grand stand and cried out, "There! They've done it."

Lady Kirkpatrick is devoted to outdoor life and goes in strongly for rowing, golf, and tennis. In discussing American football she said:

"The game played by American college teams is more of an exhibition of brute force than of genuine scientific skill. It is entirely too 'close' and does not tend to bring out the scientific ability of the players. A man's individualism is lost in the order in which the different combinations are brought into effect. In England each player anticipates what is to be done with the ball and acts accordingly. Tackles are unknown, and if a man is known to have deliberately injured another player he is put off the field immediately and suspended for a month or year, as the seriousness of the offense warrants.

"If we want to see brutalizing sport in England we have prize fights, with or without gloves, and wrestling matches, but in football we play entirely with our feet, and the ball is never in the hands of the player. It is almost a misnomer to call the college game football, when the ball is kicked only on rare occasions. The English Association game is much faster, and it is science, not strength that counts.

"After all, I suppose one's preferences are governed largely by what one is born to. It is apt to be so in religion and politics, and I suppose it is the same in sports. I prefer the Association game because I have always been used to it. You Americans like your game because it is virtually the only kind of football that you know. One of the objects of our visit is to teach you the fine points of 'socker,' so that the one kind of football will prevail throughout the world. Then international matches can be arranged. I am glad to have had an opportunity to witness your game, but I am not so sure that I want to see another."

+ + +

Sir Charles Kirkpatrick is a type of the pure English country gentleman, passionately devoted to all branches of sport for sport's sake. For years he has been one of the foremost exponents of Association football, and is considered one of the best goal keepers in Great Britain. He says it is splendid to see the spirit which is displayed by American college players. "With you," he said, "it is win at all costs, even to the extent of being badly broken up, but we English players are not so keen on winning just for the sake of beating the other side. With us the main point is the feeling that we have played fair."

Sir Ernest Cecil Cochrane, who has offered an international trophy for Association football contests between college teams of England, America, and Canada, is an earnest advocate of the English game. He is at present on a short visit to this country, and has witnessed several college football games. He has a hundred arguments in favor of Association football. Discussing the subject, he said:

"Only a few days ago I was attracted by reports of a football game played at the American League baseball park in this city which characterized the game as brutal. One paper in particular used a big display: 'Wesleyan Team in Football Riot.' Is that sport? Dr. Eliot of Harvard says he does not approve of international matches because they develop many unpleasant incidents. Surely nothing could be more conducive to the promotion of friendly feeling between the two countries.

"I have no desire to attack your American institutions, but to simply point out the advantages of 'socker' football over the game played here. If once properly introduced it cannot but gain a stronghold on the American public, and I feel satisfied that the day is not far off when the sport will become as popular in this country as in England."

A HORSE THIEF CHARITY FUND.

AN interesting story is that of what is known as the "Prescott Fund" of Prince William's Parish, now parts of Hampton and Beaufort Counties, South Carolina. It seems that in the early part of the last century an old woman who lived alone in an isolated portion of what was then Beaufort District was on her deathbed, and sent for a lawyer to draw her will to dispose of the little hut and few acres of land she had.

After she had designated to whom these were to go the lawyer told her that to avoid any legal trouble over her will she should insert a clause disposing of whatever else she might have overlooked. She therefore designated that if there should be found anything else belonging to her undisposed of that it should be taken in charge of by a certain prominent citizen of Gillisonville as Trustee for the use of the white poor of Prince William's Parish. Then she died.

When the old woman's household effects were examined for distribution as she had directed, a quantity of gold and silver coins, said to amount to about $40,000, were found under her mattress. It has always been believed that this money had been given to the old woman to keep by horse thieves, who either had died or been run out of the country and had been afraid to return to get it.

About the early part of the last century there were several gangs of horse thieves that operated along the coast from Virginia to Florida; and it was from the hanging of some of these men by a mob, headed by a man named Lynch, in Virginia that the term "lynch law" is said to have been derived. Mrs. Prescott lived in a very isolated part of the district, and it has always been believed that these thieves used to make her house their stopping place and gave her the money to keep, and that she was afraid to tell of its possession even on her deathbed.

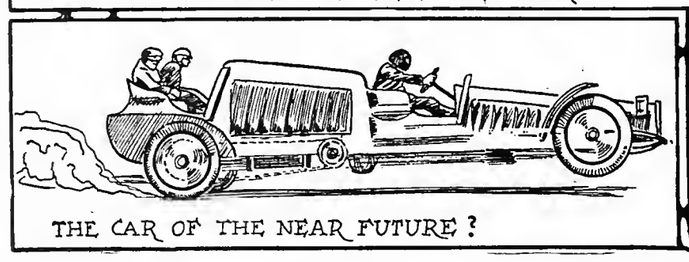
WATERPROOF FOLIAGE.

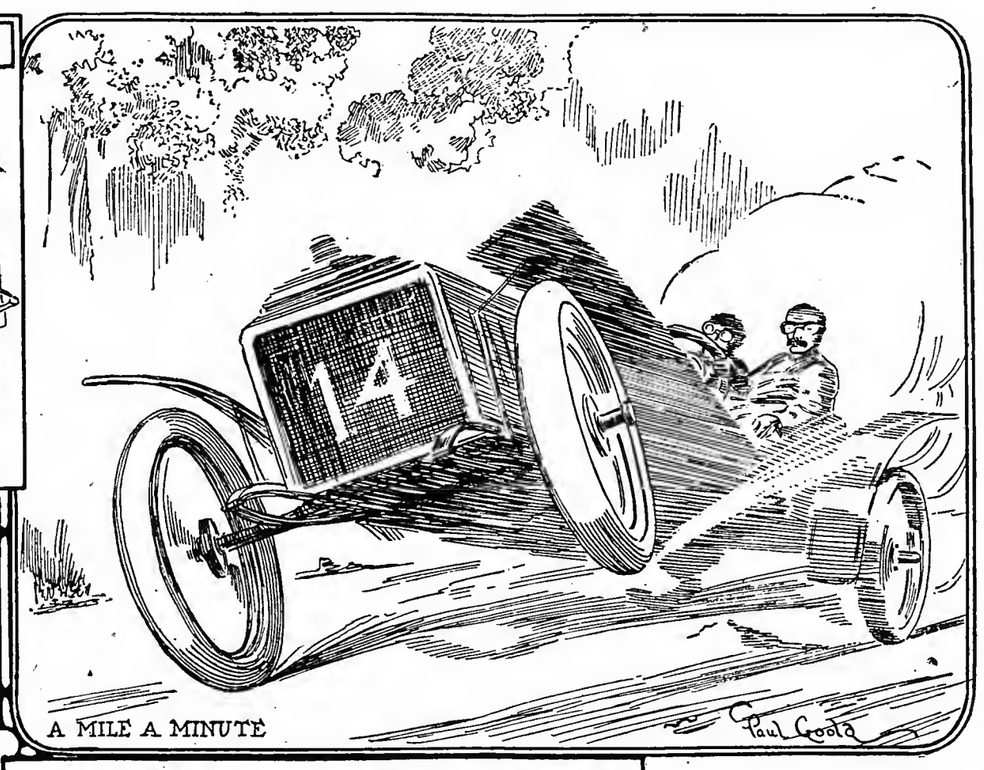
AN Oriental scholar was giving an address on the philosophy and religion of the East. His English was of good quality, only now and then becoming interesting from the humorous point of view, when he attempted colloquial idioms.

After describing with fervor the sage—the one who can walk amid the difficulties and perplexities of mortal existence and yet, unaffected by these, retain his perfect serenity—the speaker was looking about for some familiar comparison by which to bring home the idea to his hearers.

"Ah, I have it!" he said, pleased at the recollection that rewarded his effort. "It is an expressive saying of your own language, said to me by a lady with whom I was last evening conversing. Take that familiar bird the duck. It is possible to pour a bucketful of water upon that duck, and yet the water can never get into his leaves."

Grooming the Racing Autos---An Artist's Impressions





IS it possible to love an automobile, to as has been the case during the days lavish upon that hugs mechanical contrivance of startling speed abilities something akin to the devotion that owners, trainers, and jockeys feel for their favorite horses? If any one doubted such a possibility a visit to any point of the Vanderbilt Cup course on Long Island last week would promptly have dispelled that illusion.

Every village adjoining the twenty-eight-mile race circuit, every farmhouse, it is almost safe to say every stolid driver of the big, slow-moving market wagons, was infected with that peculiar fever which the excitement of automobile racing engenders. The infection was contagious. A stranger could not help catching it, and within less than twenty-four hours he would be inquiring as eagerly as one of the garage attendants if Lancia, the fat, good-natured Italian, had beaten Hemery's time, or if George Heath would outstrip the speed of the Frenchman bearing the sibilant name of Szisz.

The seriousness and the excitability of automobile racing have never been exhibited with such intenseness in America as has been the case during the days of preparation for the Vanderbilt Cup race. It needed the advent of these daredevil foreign drivers to show how everything else dwindled into insignificance before the vital question of winning an automobile race. In the French and Italian garages nothing else was talked about, was even thought about, and more than one driver, in his humorous moments, told of dreaming of how he overcame the trials of the Guinea road and the horrible "S" turn, finishing the twenty-eight miles in miraculous time. Indeed, judging from some of the times that were doled out to credulous visitors, it is evident that some of these dreams bordered dangerously upon the realm of reality.

The French and Italian drivers were insanely jealous of their reputations, and as the cars make their reputations they were deeply solicitous regarding the welfare of their monstrous machines. It was amusing as well as interesting to watch the care bestowed upon these time annihilators. Besides the driver, who bore the same relation to his car as the jockey does to his race horse, each car had a small army of attendants, and when they all got to work preparing it for a fast trial run before daylight they looked through the grayish light that precedes the dawn like so many busy insects hovering over an elongated piece of mechanism supported on four massive, low wheels.

Above the roar and pounding of the motors as the engines were tested could be heard the shrill, excited voices of the workmen as they screamed out their orders from one to another. Perhaps two men would be wriggling on the ground under the car, their arms and legs working in a frenzied effort to adjust some invisible screw or tighten up a loose bolt. Then with a quick movement their grimy faces would emerge, and perhaps four or six men would eagerly bend over the throbbing motor, listening intently for any sound that would indicate imperfect conditions.

Amid the horrible noises and the deafening retorts from the exhaust pipes a novice would have found it difficult to distinguish any variation in sound. Not so with these experts. Their ears knew exactly where every sound came from, and if it didn't crack and splutter in just the right manner more tinkering was in order. Then, when the car came back from its long run, the mechanicians took it in hand as quickly as the stable boys do the popular thoroughbred after a hard-run race, and before the driver had time to cast off his goggles they were grooming the big machine.

The amount of time, worry, and work bestowed upon these powerful racers may often appear to the casual observer as ridiculous, but to the man at the wheel it means his reputation in the automobile world, where the competition is keen and the rivalry intense.

BIG PROFITS IN CRANBERRIES.

"IT always amusses me when I am in Florida or in Washington in the Winter," said a veteran Cape Cod cranberry grower the other day, "to draw out people of other sections on the subject of cranberries. I find that many intelligent people fancy they are raised on shrubs or even on trees and picked pretty much as cherries or blackberries are. Some of the people I meet are cautious and will not commit themselves, but others are quite naïve in their ignorance and willingness to display it."

Even if ignorance of the cranberry habits is as widespread as the grower has found, appreciation of the qualities of the fruit itself grows more live and active each year until the question that is most frequently asked hereabout is "Where is the supply of the future to come from?" Already it is doubtful this year if the Eastern Thanksgiving tables will not gleam but sparsely with the glorious red sauce, for hardly had the pickers begun work when the adroit Western buyers were on the scene, riding out in every direction from their headquarters in Wareham, examining the bogs critically and making their offers before the fruit men of Boston and New York were aware what was going on. Their progressiveness is in line with recent requirements. Last year nearly 300,000 barrels were more widely distributed than ever before, hundreds of carloads going everywhere. The tendency is more and more toward the nationalization of the berry.

Everywhere on the Cape one hears of the profitableness of the industry when it is scientifically conduoted. Thus an acre of bog in Plymouth County yielded a net of $955.50; a bog of 5¾ acres for thirteen consecutive years yielded over 600 barrels annually, and earned for its owner $10 a day net profit during the entire period; a bog of 11 acres yielded $5,000 annually in 1901, 1902, and 1903; a bog of 10 acres paid for itself in three years; a bog of 45 acres paid for itself seven times in eighteen years. A bog of 16 acres yielded 2,700 barrels, or 184 barrels per acre in 1904; another of 120 acres yielded 104 barrels per acre the same year; stockholders in another bog received a dividend of 31 2-3 per cent. in 1904; stockholders in another have never received annual dividends of less than 15 per cent. during the past eleven years.

Seems Plausible.

An ingenious man has recommended a new remedy to thin people who wish to get fat. He advises them to fall off the roof of the Flatiron Building, and assures them they will come down plump.

How Foolish.

"Did he do it?"

"No; he got half way, decided he could not do it and walked back again."

New York Society Held Up to Scorn in Three New Books

Mrs. Edith Wharton's "The House of Mirth" a Novel of Remarkable Power---The Comedy of Social Life in "Our Best Society"---New York Chapters in "The Reign of Gilt."

THREE striking and interesting new books, fresh from the press, hold up to scornful criticism the fashionable social life in New York, in the present era of vast wealth and ostentatious display. Edith Wharton's novel, "The House of Mirth," (Scribner,) the title of which is derived from the Books of Ecclesiastes, vii., 4: ("The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth,") is a tragedy of our modern life, in which the relentlessness of what men used to call Fate, and esteem, in their ignorance, a power beyond their control, is as vividly set forth as it ever was by Aeschylus or Shakespeare.

The smallest details of the picture are recognizable as facts of the life that is pulsing around us in this very hour, and the personages are so lifelike that, though it may be doubted if the living original of any one of them can be positively identified, yet there will surely be many plausible identifications by readers of the book who are proud of their familiarity with Society.

The comedy of contemporary social life, on the other hand, is represented in "Our Best Society," (Putnam,) by an anonymous author whose aim has been (taking George William Curtis's "Potiphar Papers" of half a century ago as a model) to describe the vanities and follies of life among the wealthy in this era, as they impress a young, painfully self-conscious and self-satisfied literary fellow, guided in his social excursion by an adroit, charming, and competent wife.

The third book is not fiction, (avowedly,) though we should not care to be called upon to swear to all its spectacular statements of "fact." "The Reign of Gilt," by David Graham Phillips, (James Pott & Co.) is a volume of collected short essays forming a pronunciamento against American society and its greed of wealth as flamboyant and readable (not as sincere and sensible) as Jeremy Collier's historic "Short View" in which the amusements of the English Restoration were so vivaciously denounced. Much of Mr. Phillips's book treats directly of New York. The East, in his opinion, in its greed and rapacity, its affectations, its extravagance, its waste of time, its debasement of the spirit; is much worse than the West or the South. No one will care to contradict him, so far as that goes.

I.

THE essential elements of Mrs. Wharton's novel are as simple as those of the Greek tragedy to which we have likened it. Its central figure, Lily Bart, a woman bred in a world of vanity, greed, and display, and set on the wrong path (morally speaking) at the very beginning, is shown in all the stages of a long, one-sided battle with circumstance, to which she ultimately succumbs. Of uncommon physical beauty, Miss Bart is also endowed with a mind obviously capable of development. It is one of the distinguishing merits of this book (a paragon of artistic excellence in comparison with most novels of the hour) that the astute reader comprehends from the first that Miss Bart was endowed by nature with the rudiments of a good character, and that this truth is more strongly forced upon him, chapter by chapter, as the tragedy of her life unfolds in an environment of gayety and show.

Not only is this denoted in the good taste and inborn contempt for vulgar meanness which compel her to refuse to employ information unfairly obtained even to set herself right with the world when her fair name is assailed. Miss Bart's half-developed potentialities of character are apparent in every phase of her unhappy career. For this reason she is an object of pity when the web of fate closes around her, in the scene of her shaming with Rosedale, in her heroic but hopeless effort, without training for work, to earn her own living; in the hours of feverish excitement and emotional exaltation which immediately precede the end. "Sympathy" in her ambitions and in their failure she does not command. Even those of us painfully conscious of vanities and weaknesses of our own may not sympathize with her. But we may pity her, at least, and the pathos of her downfall is appreciable.

It would be doing Mrs. Wharton's book a rank injustice to set it down merely as a story with a moral, a preachment in the form of fiction. The aesthetic rather than the homiletic sense has governed the author in its making. As a finished and beautiful example of the modern novelist's art it makes its strongest appeal. "The House of Mirth" has atmosphere and perspective; it is not merely bald narrative of imagined happenings interspersed with conversational passages, and varied, here and there, by descriptions of scenery. Its varied elements are harmoniously blended, and the discriminating reader who has completed the whole story in a protracted sitting or two must rise from it with the conviction that there are no parts of it which do not properly and essentially belong to the whole. Its descriptive passages have verity and charm, it has the saving grace of humor, its multitude of personages, as we have said, all have the semblance of life.

But it will be acclaimed largely because of its moral side—its vivid, pitiless portrayal of the folly which pervades a newly builded, imperfectly founded, social structure; and it will have great vogue because the sins and shortcomings of New York's fashionable life are set forth in it by one who can speak of them, with a sophisticated utterance from a first-hand knowledge. This may not have been, probably was not, the result Mrs. Wharton was chiefly working for when she wrote the book; but it is bound to be, for a time, the most conspicuous, most loudly proclaimed, result of her labors.

II.

THERE is much less of the semblance of sophistication in "Our Best Society," and through it all, in its brightest as in its tenderest passages, the ethical purpose of the story is kept plainly in sight. That the influence of the social routine is all for the bad one who takes this book seriously must believe. That Society's restlessness and lack of reverence, its mistaken ideals, its cruelties tend to the degradation of character the humble rural reader may learn without danger to his own morals.

There is plenty of humor in the book, and the author is a person of keen observation. We have been unable to decide whether the inherent evidence indicates the authorship of a young man or a woman of mature years. In some of the earlier chapters one fancies that he detects the hand of John Corbin. Much space is given over to an elaborate portrayal, almost a caricature, of Clyde Fitch, under the name of Walter Hart. But this is not well enough founded to justify the belief that Mr. Corbin wrote the book. Whoever wrote it has met Mr. Fitch, and has been as far in his city house as the lower hall. But he or she does not know him, and is mistaken in estimating Fitch's character, and, as a whole, in portraying his manner. On the other hand, that internal evidence some persons have imagined pointing to Miss Jeannette Gilder's authorship seems to us dubious.

The story is deficient in atmosphere and perspective, like most native novels. Taking it up after "The House of Mirth" is to subject it to a severe test. As for its personages, except Walter Hart, we doubt if any one has a living original. The Vanzandts, and Hendersons, Teddy Markoe, Dick Ferris, the knavish portrait painter, and the blooming divorcée, are probably composite portraits. Holbrook, the theatre manager, has no actual counterpart in the theatrical world. Miss Lily Valentine, the actress, is not more like Miss Ethel Barrymore than she is like Miss Bonnie Maginn. This is not a fault, of course.

One marvels, however, that in a novel designed avowedly to picture New York society there should be so much of the playhouse and its actors, such an intolerable quantity of the sack of showdom. Are we going theatre mad? Surely there is nothing in the current drama to justify the hold it has on the minds of people who write. We are inclined to believe this a serious defect of "Our Best Society." It is probably in the mind of the author, possessed by the thought of the fortune that comes to the successful playwright, that the stage dominates. We doubt if our most frivolous society eats, drinks, sleeps, and plays, thinks, and talks the theatre all the time.

III.

MR. DAVID GRAHAM PHILLIPS, after arraigning society for its gross extravagance in "The Reign of Gilt," finds that relief will come through work and education. Mr. Phillips has hope. Woman, who has been responsible for existing evils, is to help us out of our troubles. He declares that one-third of all the women in the United States, not living on farms, now earn their living outside of their own homes. Mr. Phillips sees this and believes that it is good. He looks to a bright future:

> Let us read the past aright. Its departed civilizations are not a gloomy warning, but a bright promise. If limited intelligence in a small class produced such gleams of glory in the black sky of history, what a day must now be dawning.

People will read Mr. Phillips's book chiefly, however, not for the hope he holds out of the Nation's salvation, (we doubt if many of us really believe in our hearts that the Republic is in danger,) but for his gorgeous portrayal of the luxury of fashionable life. It seems that a multi-millionaire's well-preserved wife now spends $55,000 annually on her wardrobe. He describes the wardrobe intimately. Her sons and daughters are equally extravagant, and are growing more so. In a few years' time it will be necessary for a feminine social leader to spend $75,000 for her toggery. The old gentleman, it seems, is less extravagant. He has fewer horses than his eldest son, and his suite of apartments is smaller and plainer than his wife's. But then you can never tell what the old man spends at the corner grocery.

There is splendidly inspiring reading in these chapters of Mr. Phillips's book—about silks and laces and diamonds and gold knickknacks, luncheons and dinners, yachts and racing stables, palaces and bungalows. It has a fine Roman flavor.

DR. BRADY'S NEW BOOK.

DR. CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY'S new book, "Three Daughters of the Confederacy," (G. W. Dillingham,) contains three stories of girls of the South, characterized by the inclusive sympathy he has already shown for both parties in the great struggle between North and South, an impartiality explained by his preface.

Two of these daughters of the Confederacy are in strange fashion wooed and won by their foes, and these two "loved the South with all the passionate fervor for which the Southern woman was famous." The third, with an allegiance divided between father and lover, "was but a lukewarm daughter after all," but destiny gave her a lover, "Southern in every fibre of his being," a Captain of cavalry under Stonewall Jackson.

Naturally the course of true love runs anything but smooth with these young people, but they have true and loyal hearts, and "love finds a way." Dr. Brady's negro dialect, of which he is happily sparing, is the conventional dialect of the negro minstrel, not the speech familiar to Southern ears. His lads and lassies of that simple as well as strenuous time seem occasionally just a little touched with twentieth century modernity, but the author has spun three pretty and kindly tales, which deserve as warm a welcome as has been accorded to his former stories of the civil war.

The last of the trio is of peculiar interest in its authentic anecdotes and admirable flashlight portraits of the great men of that era—Lincoln, Grant, Sheridan, Lee, Jackson. The author has written nothing finer than "Stonewall Jackson's Greatest Day."

Dr. Brady is to be heartily thanked for his virtues of omission. He forbears to wring his readers' hearts; he is economic of gore, and touching gently the inevitable tragedies of the war of brothers, he relieves the sombre pictures with humor as well as romance. Dr. Brady belongs to the growing class of writers who merit the beatitude of the peacemakers. Such as he make more and more for sectional harmony, showing, as they do, that both North and South were filled with sincere patriots, reading the same Bible, praying to the same God, and alike firm in the right as God gave them to see the right.

BLOSSOMS OF MOUNT HUNGER.

A DAUGHTER OF THE RICH," by M. E. Waller, author of "The Wood Carver of 'Lympus," is a story of a poor little girl who is ill and unhappy, and who is sent for strength and recuperation to join a household of happy-go-lucky boys and girls on a lovely farm in an ideal country. (Little, Brown & Co.) It is a healthy story for young people, and although originally published in 1903, in its attractive new edition it will probably find a new and wider public for itself now.

There were so many Blossoms, and they were such delightful people—from "Martie," the mother, down to the wee-est May Blossom, they were thoroughly wholesome—so that when poor little Hazel Clyde was banished from home to spend a year among them on the farm, she fell in love with the whole family at the very start.

There are a number of escapades and adventures described in the story, and Miss Waller, besides, has made a concession to her older readers by weaving in a nice little romance about Mary Blossom, the eldest daughter, and Hazel's cousin Jack, who, although he was immensely rich, was as beautifully unspoiled as Hazel herself.

A MOTHER-IN-LAW.

PATRICIA: A MOTHER," by Iota, (Appleton) is a clever story of a red-headed woman and her mother-in-law and an English country neighborhood. Both of the women are widows, and there is a boy. In the beginning Mr. Gervas Portal, a man of all the virtuous attitudes, lies dead up stairs, and his adoring mother and his young widow sit below, the red hair of the latter jarring sadly upon the deep luxurious grief of the former. Then a will is read—a will in which Mr. Gervas Portal has continued to insult his wife in a manner which only a woman's ingenuity could invent—managing at the same time to involve in the business a modest country gentleman of the neighborhood and the male gossip, the most precious guest at afternoon teatime for miles around.

It is obvious to the reader from the outset that the late Gervas Portal of Portal, Esquire, has been a slimy blackguard, but to his mother he seems a saint—as the author expresses it, "he was her ideal of herself made perfect man." To his widow he was known pretty much for what he was; her need was "to get over him alone and unobserved." Poisonous and pervasive personality as he had been, that was difficult enough, and was made impossible by the presence of his mother, intent on building of the rest of her life (and his widow's) a shrine for his memory.

It is one of those stories which illustrate the evil which may be done in the name of conscious rectitude and the irresistible force in a British community of a tactfully adjusted attitude of martyrdom. That attitude is the elder Mrs. Portal's—who is both able and sincere. Mrs. Gervas Portal, on the contrary, is buoyantly human and direct, after the modern manner of beautiful women—she can swim, ride, fire, and no widow's cap can make her look demure. People look at her, "always have looked at her and always will," she says, and talk about her afterward—the women around their tea tables maliciously. The struggle centres around young Tom, Mrs. Gervas Portal's son. The question is whether he shall be a "real man" and his mother's or a copy of the later Gervas and his grandmother's, and the author has known how to invest the contest for a confessedly very ordinary schoolboy with a very likely interest.

As psychological studies Mrs. Portal and Mrs. Gervas Portal are marvels of acute analysis, and there are other femininities, especially a girl who "needs feeding up," almost as mercilessly dissected. As for the others, the male gossip is too clever and malicious to be true—but he is vastly amusing, and the person who serves as the author's ideal of the manly Englishman, Mr. Richard Venour, is admirably and engagingly incomplete in that rôle to a point which only a woman's mind could compass. Externally and except at certain critical moments, in other words, he is the real thing. Then he is utterly not it. The conclusion of the story is rather such as to please the reader then to fulfill the promise of the devilish ingenuity of the beginning, but it's full everywhere of sharp things illuminatingly said.

LOVE AND PERIL.

THE FLIGHT OF GEORGIANA," by Robert Neilson Stephens, (Boston: L. C. Page,) goes, as a flight should, upon wings. It is a romance of the days just following Culloden, and holds not a little intrigue, peril, and adventure. Properly speaking, it is not a historical novel, since it concerns itself with the affairs of fictitious persons; hence the reader is spared that uncomfortable subliminal fear (the "familiar" of much modern fiction) that he is getting facts and fancies so queerly mixed as to make Frankenstein's monster the prototype of the real personages of the past.

Some pages of description might have been spared, for the novel is of a sort which makes its readers impatient to "get on," caring above all to know what is to become of the fair Georgiana and of her gallant young lover, so resolute to "find out the way." It were to be wished that the author had not resorted to the worn and rusty device of forcing a girl to pledge her hand to the man she loathes in order to save the life of the man she loves: Mr. Stephens has too many resources at his fingers' ends to need this bit of ancient machinery.

However, "The Flight of Georgiana" is to be classed among "rattling good stories," ending in the good old fashion.

There is something in youth perennially responsive to every variant of "Young Lochinvar," and it is safe to predict that not a few young eyes will eagerly devour Mr. Stephens's clever pages, whereon is set forth a like scamper "over bank, bush, and scaur."

THREE SISTERS.

THE latest addition to Rosa Neuchette Carey's long series of stories, "The Household of Peter," (Lippincott,) deals with the fortunes of a young physician and his three worshipful sisters—all young girls and in their several ways good to look at. The action begins with a pointed request from the doctor to his sisters. They must call upon Hennah Burke, who is a young woman of plain exterior and has, moreover, risen from servant and companion to an old lady of means to heiress of that old lady's wealth. Many social niceties are involved, but obviously this Hannah (who is as good as she is unbeautiful) is Dr. Peter's fate. Then there is a baronet's daughter who gets hurt in the street and is borne to Peter's house to be nursed. That introduces the medical household to the circle of country families and leads to much. Then there is a gay young widow—also a member of a country family. She enters into the plot and would willingly flirt with the doctor. For the rest, much cozy talk among women after Miss Carey's well-known fireside manner.

COAL MINES OF ILLINOIS.

THERE are two courses open to the writer of to-dey who loves to chronicle a good rousing fight. He may take to the pages of history and the swashbuckling romance, or he may study the economic warfare of our own day, which has its equivalent for every detail of that earlier strife." Thus writes Grace MacGowan Cooke in her preface to her new novel, "The Grapple." (Boston: L. C. Page.) Having essayed the historical novel, she has wisely elected in "The Grapple" to tell the story of a modern economic war; its scene, the coal mines of Illinois; its hero, a young mine owner who has himself come up from the pick, and who is in fullest sympathy with all that is best in the union, yet who steadfastly refuses to permit it to dominate him or his mine. The grapplers are himself on the one side, his striking workmen on the other; and few indeed are the tales of armored knights in tournament or battle which can stir the blood like this.

Mrs. Cooke does not permit her thesis to clog the wheels of her tale, the movement of which is as swift as it is dramatic. The theme is a sombre one, but it is enlivened with humor—though, by the bye, it is only in the humorous pages that the narrative drags and the need of some compression is suggested. The love story is a bit awkwardly handled, the otherwise admirable hero bearing himself therein after the fashion of a cad. The villain is rather impossible, and we object emphatically to the manner of his taking off. We wish some one with "a great patience" and a gift for statistics would compute the number of villains of romance who have been disposed of in precisely this way, and would then find out how many foes of real life have gone over precipices end into engulfing waters locked in a death-grapple. We cannot help suspecting that this particular Nemesis belongs in the property room of the novelist.

Mrs. Cooke's story is, however, so original, so strong, and so finely told that to point out flaws is of the nature of ingratitude. It is a book to be read for both enjoyment and enlightenment; and if read by the Captains of Industry and the Leaders of Labor, one would think it could hardly fail of the beneficent mission of helping each to understand the other—and understanding is always the solvent of discord.

"The Grapple" marks a distinct advance in the author's art. She shows herself equal to the task of handling the most vital and difficult problem of our time, and of contributing not a little to its solution. She has a large comprehension of human nature in many phases, and her sympathies are correspondingly catholic. She writes, too, with a wise restraint, depicting the negro, for example, as he is seen by Northern eyes, without yielding to the snare of attempting the dialect of his speech or of his mind.

This unusual novel deserves a large and thoughtful public, and no ephemeral place among the books of the day.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER.

A Man," says a much-divorced woman in "Time the Comedian," by Kate Jordan, (Appleton,) "has no right to fail. When his ship has sprung a leak it's generally due to mismanagement or conceit, and it's a foolish woman who helps him plug up the holes and trics being comfortable with him on the wreck." That, however, is not quite the morel of Kate Jordan's story—a story which, in spite of a deal of false sentiment, exhibits every now and then a really human aspect. It is a very real tragedy with which the tale begins—a pretty, weak, pleasure-loving woman, whose earlier days have been spent frivolously in cities, exiled by her husband's misfortunes to a dull country village. Having no resources within her, the woman moans and counts herself a martyr. Then the husband sends her to visit New York and commends her there to the kindness of his closest friend of better days, a lively and enormously wealthy young clubmen of the kind women dearly love to put in novels.

Thereupon ensue suppers, drives, a house party, and a tragedy. Somebody shoots himself. The woman goes abroad to live in Paris, care for her complexion, and bring up her little daughter. The daughter is one of those modern young women who take to studios and things. She is a good girl and knows nothing about the dreadful episode in her mother's life. Now comes her romance, and this time for the sins of the parent to be visited upon the child. Paris is the scene of this part of the story—you are driven in the Bois, you go to Longchamps, and the opera. You are present at wild suppers in the Quartier Latin, where models assist in costumes more or less professional. There is the enormously wealthy clubman again—hardly so young as he was—and there's Tom, who is the kind of faithful young man a woman goes to when she's weary of the strife.

On the Rolling Wave.

John T. McCutcheon, the Chicago cartoonist, added the following story to the string of his transatlantic experiences. An American lady coming on deck from the dining saloon one morning met a Frenchman.

"Good morning, Monsieur," said the American lady, "have you had breakfast?"

"Au contraire, Madame," responded the Frenchman feebly.

Strictly Logical.

Tommy—Say, paw, why do men get bald sooner than women?

Mr. Funny—Because they don't wear their hair so long.

COYOTE AND THE STAR

By ARTHUR GUITERMAN.

This is a legend, from Siskiyou Bar,
About "The Coyoté Who Danced with a Star."

Now, great were the deeds that Coyoté had done!
Coyoté had stolen the flame of the sun;
Coyoté had broken the Frost-Witch's pen,
Releasing the salmon, desired of men.
Coyoté was proud of his craft and his might,
His fleetness of foot and his clearness of sight,
Of his scent, that was choicest of all that is choice;
And Coyoté was vain of his wonderful voice.
He sat like a monarch, exalted on high,
Where Sisson's cold summits are keen in the sky
And watched on the sweep of ethereal blue
The stars and their satellites pass in review.

Aloft and alone
O'er Shasta's white cone
A mischievous Star-fairy twinkled and shone.
So lightly she danced
That, charmed and entranced,
Coyoté cried boldly, "Fair, heavenly sprite,
Permit me to join in your glorious flight.
I beg, I demand!
Oh, reach me your hand!
Together we'll frolic o'er water and land."
How flashed the Aurora, till heaven and earth
Were gay with the glow of celestial mirth!
"O hairy Coyoté! how stupid you are
To dream for a moment to dance with a Star!"

What pencil will venture—what brush will engage
To show the Coyoté in justified rage?
He lifted his muzzle, he stiffened his tail
Affrighting the Night with a quavering wail.
With yelp and with yowl,
With growl and with howl
He startled the owl and the panther a-prowl.
He screamed like a baby bereft of its toys;
He shattered the sky with his scandalous noise;
With his "Yap! yap! ki-yee!"
In its weird minor key—
For never was singer remorseless as he.

All vainly the Fairy cajoled and denied;
He wouldn't hear reason. Then, wearied, she cried,
"I wish you were dumb!
You're crazy; but—come!"
And gingerly reached him a finger and thumb.
He leaped!—and away, like the shaft and the feather,
The Star and Coyoté were flying together.

And now, as he fled with that Spirit of Light,
There rushed far beneath him a glorious sight
Of ranges and cañons and barrens and plains,
Of rivers cascading with turbulent rains,
Of armies of bison and cimmaron grays
And legions of antelope bounding away;
The towns of the Mandans, the Nez Percé ranches,
The Utés, Pi Utés, the dashing Comanches
And Modocs, in-reining their snorting cayuses
And shouting to women with wickered papooses,
"Look! see!"—as they waved to that vision afar,
"The clever Coyoté, above, with a Star!"

To caper in style
For many a mile
Careering the heavens, was grand—for a while:
But silently grew in Coyoté, apace,
The awe and the horror of limitless space.
He felt on his temples the grip of a vice;
The hand of his partner seemed colder than ice.
'Twas dreadful to gaze upon mountains—like barrows!
The tents of the Kahrocs, like flint heads of arrows;
The silvery Klamath, whose broad-bosomed flow
Showed meagre, 'mid hills, like the string of a bow
Relaxed after battle. Grown dizzy and numb,
He loosened his hold on the finger and thumb,
And dropped to the earth like a meteor—plumb!
And lit with a spat,
As flat as a mat!

So here is the moral from Siskiyou Bar:
"Yo' callow Coyoté, don't dance with no Star!"

Ascoli Demands Its Cope

THE inhabitants of the little Italian town of Ascoli are very indignant because the Minister of Public Instruction has not restored to them the famous piviale, or cope, that was given to their city in 1258 by Pope Nicholas IV., a native of that place, and which was mysteriously stolen from the cathedral in 1902 and afterward returned to the Italian Government by J. Pierpont Morgan, who had bought it without knowing its origin.

Last year an Italian lady recognized it among a collection of art objects loaned to the South Kensington Museum in London, and when it became known in Italy that the precious relic had been found in the possession of Mr. Morgan, who is well known there, great was the joy of the Italians, and especially at Ascoli, for it was believed that it could easily be recovered from that generous collector. In fact, the cope was quickly restored to Italy, and the feeling of gratitude was expressed by public thanks to Mr. Morgan, his bust in marble was set up in Ascoli, a street was named after him, and he received the honorary citizenship of the town, as well as a decoration from the King and personal thanks from the Pope.

Since then, the whole population of the town has been looking forward to celebrating with true Southern enthusiasm the return of the precious relic; but to the repeated demands of the Mayor, the Ministry at Rome has replied that nothing whatever can be done until the judicial authorities conclude their inquiry regarding the circumstances of the theft, adding that in the meantime the cope is safely housed in the Royal Gallery of Ancient Art in the Corsini Palace, where it will shortly be on public exhibition.

The citizens of Ascoli are highly incensed. They would like to have it on exhibition in their own town, to which, they claim, it would draw many visitors. As it is, they know that judicial investigations in Italy are interminable, and fear that the reason given is a mere pretext to keep the precious cope permanently in Rome. Several prominent men, including the architect Luca Beltrami, have taken up the cause of the little town against the arbitrary power of the Government.

THE MOTOR CAR

The "Low-Backed Car" Up to Date.

(WITH APOLOGIES TO LOVER.)

When first I saw sweet Peggy,
'Twas on a Saturday;
A motor-car she ran, and wore
The motor-car array;
A leather coat was on her back,
A cloud-veil on her head,
And goggles glittered on her eyes,
When by me fast she sped.
As she sat in the motor-car,
She tooted a loud "ta-ta,"
And I wondered who she
Under heaven might be—
And I followed the motor-car.

In battle's wild commotion,
The proud and mighty Mara
With hostile scythes dsmands his tithes
Of death in warlike cars;
While Peggy, peaceful goddess,
Has darts in her bright eye
That knock men down all over town,
As right and left they fly;
While she sits in her motor-car,
Than battles more dangerous far—
For the doctor's art
Cannot cure the heart
That is hit from that motor-car.

Sweet Peggy 'round her car, Sir,
Has mangled dogs and geese,
But the scores of hearts she slaughters
By far outnumber these;
While she there in her cloud-veil sits,
Just like a turtle-dove,
Well worth the cage, I do engage,
Of the blooming god of love!
While she sits in her motor-car,
Pedestrians scatter afar;
But blame her old auto!
It cannot be caught O!
My! she scorches that motor-car!

Oh, I'd rather own that car, Sir,
With Peggy by my side,
Than a coach and four, or steeds galore
And a "frail-cat" for my bride.
For the "frail-cat" would sit in a carriage,
On a cushion made with taste—
While Peggy would sit beside me,
With my arm around her waist;
While we sped in the motor-car,
To ask the consent of her Pa;
Oh, my heart would beat high
At her glance and her sigh—
Though it beat in a motor-car!

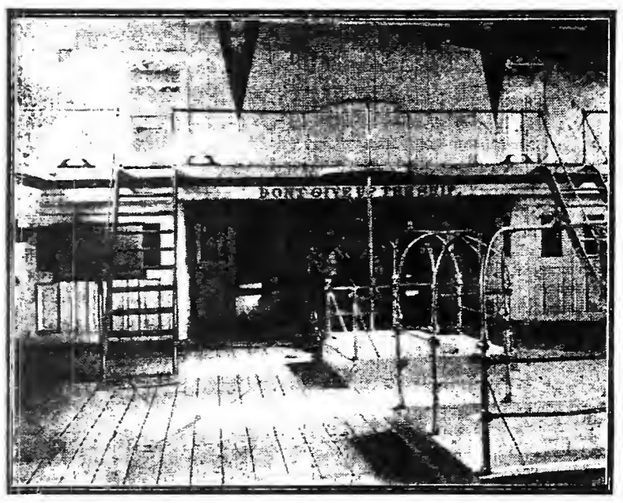
"Old Ironsides" Will Remain in Charlestown Navy Yard

Navy Department Would Not Consent to Transfer of the Constitution to Brooklyn--Her Glorious History.



Bridge on Conetitution, Now Housed Over.

THE most famous ship in the American Navy, the frigate Constitution, is giving indications that she is getting old. The stories of her very precarious condition have been denied, but it is unlikely that she can stay afloat much longer. For several years she has been at the Charlestown Navy Yard, one of the navy's most sacred possessions. It speaks well for the patriotism of the school children of Brooklyn that they have considered raising a fund to purchase Old Ironsides, but the Navy Department could scarcely part with her under any conditions, even to follow the poetical advice of Oliver Wendell Holmes, given when the frigate was only about thirty years old:

\+ + +

Nail to the mast her holy flag,
Set every threadbare sail,
And give her to the god of storms,
The lightning and the gale.
For
Her thunders shook the mighty deep
And there should be her grave.

The Constitution is not as old by thirty years as England's Victory, cherished now at Portsmouth for herself and for memories of Keppel and Kempenfelt, of Howe and of Nelson.

\+ + +

"Old Ironsides" was built in Boston and launched Sept. 20, 1797, at the time when the atrocities perpetrated on our commerce by the Mediterranean pirates convinced the Government that a naval force was essential to the maintenance of American dignity. She was a forty-four-gun frigate, with a displacement of 1,576 tons, and cost Uncle Sam $302,719. She was heavier in armament than any other frigate afloat, and a radical innovation was the mounting of 24-pounders in her broadsides. British naval men believed her too heavily armed to possess any respectable speed. Early in her career, however, the Constitution foreshadowed her marvelous sailing powere by running away from a British cruiser on the Santo Domingo station, whose commander had challenged Capt. Silas Talbot of the Constitution to an all-day race for a cask of wine.

The beginning of the war of 1812 saw the Constitution in dry dock in Chesapeake Bay, under command of Capt. Isaac Hull. With a green crew, which he was busy training, he got his boat to sea as quickly as possible, with orders to join a squadron at New York under Commodore Rodgers. While on hie way to obey he fell in with a powerful British squadron off the Jersey coast. The escape of the Constitution under conditions reflecting the highest credit on Captain and crew forms one of the most dramatic chapters in nautical warfare. It was also an event of the greatest importance for the Americen cause. The capture of "Old Ironsides" would have been a terrible blow.

After his escape Hull went to Boston and reported to the department, but he did not await orders, correctly surmising that the timid officials, learning of his past danger, would keep him inactive in port. Shortly after he had left such orders did arrive, and had any mishap befallen the Constitution it would have gone hard with Hull. Ae a matter of fact, Hull now led her to her most famous victory.

The British frigate Guerriere, Capt. Dacres, was cruising off Halifax, and Hull, hearing of his whereabouts determined to meet him. He wae anxious to ehow what the "fir-built Yankee frigates, flying a piece of striped bunting at their mastheads" could do. It was on the afternoon of Aug. 19, 1812, that Hull and Dacres fought the firet frigate action of the war. Dacres, too, was anxious to fight and expressed sublime confidence in his ship.

The Guerriere, a frigate bold,
On the foaming ocean rolled,
Commanded by proud Dacres, the grandee, oh!
With as choice a British crew
As a rammer ever drew,
Could flog the Frenchmen two to one so handy, oh!

When this frigate bove in view,
Says proud Dacres to his crew,
"Come, clear ship for action and be handy, oh!
To the weather gage, boys, get her,"
And to make his men fight better
Gave them to drink gunpowder mixed with brandy, oh!

The effect of the Constitution's first broadside with the much-ridiculed twenty-four-pounders, fired at a range of only forty yards, was terrific. The American gunners, unlike the British, never fired without sighting, and it was no accident that sent the Guerriere's spars overboard one after the other. Less than thirty minutes after the Constitution's first broadside the English frigate was a helpless hulk. This triumph of American gunnery, American shipbuilding, and American seamanship came at a most opportune moment. The country was just mourning the disgraceful surrender of Detroit when Old Ironsides sailed into Boston. The Nation's joy was unbounded. Congress voted $50,000 to the officers and sailors of the Constitution and a gold medal to Hull. The last verse of a song written at the time expresses, in the feeble manner of the poetry of the day, popular enthusiasm:

Come, fill your glasses full
And we'll drink to Capt. Hull,
And so merrily we'll push about the brandy, oh!
John Bull may toast his fill,
Let the world say what it will,
But the Yankee boy for fighting is the dandy, oh!

The next battle in which Old Ironsides participated was with the Java, off the Brazilian coast. It took place on Dec. 29, with Capt. Bainbridge in command of the American frigate. Though the Constitution suffered worse than in her engagement with the Guerriere, it took her lees than two hours to make an utter wreck of her opponent. Thie was the third frigate action of the war, in each of which the American vessel had been victorious.

\+ + +

Owing the the blockade of Bostnn by a British squadron the Constitution was cooped up nearly a year. In January, 1814, however, she eluded the blockaders, and got to sea for a short cruise in which ehe captured four prizes. From April to December, 1814, she was again blockaded in Boston, but on Dec. 17 the dreaded frigate was again at large under command of Capt. Stewart. She distinguished herself now by defeating in a single action the sloops Levant and Cyane. A large British squadron nearly succeeded in bottling her up in a port in the Madeiras, but the old ship managed to escape again, partly owing tn blunders of the British commander. Stewart's masterful handling of his ship, howsver, entitles him to favorable comparison with Hull and Bainbridge. Throughout the war, indeed, she was magnificently commanded. This was her last cruise during the war.

\+ + +

One more narrow escape of a different kind Old Ironsides was to have. At the beginning of the civil war she was lying at Annapolis as a training ship, and nearly fell into the hands of the Confederates. She was safely towed to New York, but came nearer than ever before to having a hostile flag floating at her gaff. Since then she has lived as becomes a frigate retired with honor the uneventful life of a receiving ship at the various navy yards.

The Feeding of New York's Down Town Women Workers---A New Social Phenomenon

THE only force which is strong enough to break down social convention is economic necessity. Thirty years ago, when Tennessee Claflin, now Lady Francis Cook, and Victoria Woodhull led the way for women into Wall Street, the intrepid sisters battled in vain for the privilege of being served without escort in the middle of the day at a downtown restaurant.

Yesterday, something like 1,000 young women, not one of whom had an escort, were served in the downtown district in the middle of the night without comment or question, while in the middle of the day some 25,000 young women were fed as a matter of the most obvious course.

The economic necessity which has forced women out of the home and into the world of business has completely annihilated the old idea that a woman should eat only in the privacy of her own household or in the homes of her friends, has created the absolutely new social phenomenon of women eating in public, unescorted by men, by the tens of thousands, and has given rise to a wholly new phase of the restaurant business.

\+ + +

When Tennessee Claflin and Victoria Woodhull brought their coachman into Delmonico's and made him sit at the table with them in order to fulfill the exact letter of the law requiring that women should have male escorts, and, in that way, compelled service, social convention was invincible as to the impropriety, or even the immorality, of women's eating out of their own homes. The economic changes which have since forced them to follow the celebrated blue-stocking "lady brokers" into business had not yet arisen, and the attempts of the two or three women who made the first assaults upon the walls of the old order resulted only in ridicule and ignominy for themselves. Tennessee Claflin and Victoria Woodhull were hooted in the streets, and the cause for which they fought was not advanced. They left New York, went abroad, married rich and influential men, and, through the power of wealth and position, acquired influence and distinction in other directions, while the cauee to which they had given the passionate fervor of their youth emoldered and was forgotten.

Meanwhile, however, the forces of social and industrial development and evolution went quietly on. Nobody fought for it, but some way or other the significant sign—momentous portent of the future—"Tables for Ladies" began to appear in restaurant windows. Whole floors of restaurant buildings were reserved and given over to women's use alone. "Ladies' Lunch Rooms" were established. Even a "Ladies' Lunch Counter" made its appearance.

Last Spring ar enterprising syndicate, seizing upon the idea furnished by certain philanthropic Chicago women who had established a number of "noonday rest and lunch clubs" for working girls in the Windy City, founded, as an experiment, a woman's lunch and club room at 100 Nassau Street. By the middle of August the speculators were forced by the number of applications for membership to open a second lunch and club room at 43 Broad Street. Within the last month they have had to add the serving of dinners to their daily programme at the Broad Street place and to enlarge the capacity of the establishment in Nassau Street by renting another floor for the parlors and dressing rooms and throwing the apartments formerly used as euch into more space for diuing tables.

It is estimated by Mrs. R. E. Yeager, Superintendent of the club, that when the alterations are completed 5,000 girls will be fed daily by the two establishments—some 1,000 of these after the hour when it used to be considered unsafe for a woman to be alone on the downtown streets.

At these Princess Clubs—as they have been named on the theory that every American girl is a Princess—there are, besides the lunch rooms, parlors, each furnished with a piano, easy chairs, and couches; libraries, equipped with books, magazines, and writing materials, and commodious dressing roome. These conveniences give to the girls who frequent the club the comforts and advantages of a home life entirely outside of and independent of their homes, a fact which in itself would have been considered a dangerous and pernicious tendency ten years ago.

The entire system at the Princesses is carried out on the plan of a club. The patrons are furnished with membership cards, issued monthly, at 25 cents each, which they must present at the door. Non-members are, however, admitted by the payment of a five-cent fee. Once inside, steam tables, set with excellent food at low prices, offer to the girls a choice of soups, fish, meats, and vegetables. Further on long tables spread with cold dishes present a wide variety of salads, breads, sweets, and the indispensable pickles. Meats are only 8 cents a portion, vegetables 4 to 5 cents, salade 5 cents, biscuite 2 cents, breads 1 cent, sandwiches 5 cents, tea, coffee, and cocoa 3 cents; milk 4 cents, and most of the desserts, including ice cream, 5 cents.

\+ + +

The patrons pile up their selections of food on a tray which they receive at the door, and present it to a neat maid at the end of the tables to be checked up. At the entrance of the lunch-room, where the tables are spread, they get their own knives, forks, spoons, paper napkins, and glasses of water, hunt a table that pleases them, and sit down to the quiet enjoyment of a cheap and excellent lunch. At the clubs in Chicago, upon which the Princess clubs were modeled, the patrons are required to gather up their own dishes and place them on a dumb waiter to be carried down to the dishwashers, but the New York institution has provided colored men to perform this service for its members.

The resistless force of the tide of feminine invaders of the "business lunch" was shown in Chicago a year or two ago, when an attempt was made to establish a lunch and rest club for young men, modeled on the lines of the rest and lunch clubs for young women, in the grimy old wholesale district. It was assumed beforehand that there were very few young women working in that district, but before the club—which was eminently successful with the young men—had been running a month, the insistent demand of hundreds of girls in the wholesale offices forced the originators of the enterprise to enlarge its scope and throw open its doors to feminine patrons.

Despite the obvious advantages of such institutions as the Princess clubs, they have, however, appeared powerless to injure the business of the other restaurants in the financial district in New York which cater to women. Directly across from the Princess club in Broad Street there is a "lunch house"—so called by its proprietor to distinguish it from the other restaurants in his system, which are open all the hours of the twenty-four—which servee from 800 to 1,000 meals a day at its ostentatiously advertised "tables for ladies."

Just off Wall Street on Broadway there is a restaurant which serves 1,500 women daily within the space of two hours. On Park Row an all-night lunchroom of invincible respectability has a daily average of 3,000 women patrons, some 1,000 of whom are served any time from 6 P. M. to 1 A. M. without being subjected to comment, criticism, or undue observation. An exceptionally attractive young woman whose home is on Staten Island and who works on one of the Park Row morning papers has taken her midnight luncheon at this place on her way to the 1 o'clock boat for months without incurring the least difficulty or incivility.

Further up Park Row, at the corner of Chambers Street, there is another restaurant which feeds its scores of women nightly as well as its hundreds of women daily. Over on Broadway, a little way up from Chambers, is an establishment which crowds an average of 2,000 luncheons for business women between the hours of 12 and 4.

At almost all the downtown restaurants of the better class unescorted women are now cordially received without suspicion or restriction during all the hours of serving. But even at these places women alone are welcomed up to 6 o'clock, and the sign "Ladies' and Gentlemen's Restaurant" gives ample testimony of the desire on the part of the proprietors to receive a large feminine patronage. The daily average of meals served during the day before 6 is estimated at 300.

\+ + +

Even the French restaurants have been forced into line. In dingy old Fulton Street, where shirtwaiste and petticoats were unknown twenty years ago, the affable proprietor of a neat little French table d'hote welcomes daily some hundreds of lone women for both luncheon and dinner with punctilious cordiality, whatever private opinions he may cherish in his secret soul as to the propriety of women's dining in public alone, and across the street a more pretentious establishment, also French, opens hospitable doors to all the hungry, irrespective of sex.

Some idea of the women workers that New York feeds every day may be gained from the estimate of one proprietor that his system of forty restaurants feeds alone from 15,000 to 20,000. From this estimate it is safe to assume that the number of women served in a city which supports hundrede of restaurants which make a specialty of catering to women may be placed somewhere up in the hundreds of thousands.

\+ + +

To persons living in the towns and villages where the old economic and social order still rules with unassailed authority this is an almost incomprehensible state of affairs. The other day a man from up the State—a business man, by the way, not a farmer—wae dining with a city friend in a New York restaurant when the New Yorker observed his rural visitor glancing furtively and with a sort of melancholy awe about at the groups of unescorted women dining absolutely alone at the surrounding tables.

"What's the matter, old man?" asked the New Yorker.

The visitor to the metropolis shook his head sadly.

"It's a dreadful thought," he said. "So many nice, fresh-looking young girls! You'd never believe but that they were all perfectly respectable to look at them."

"But they are perfectly respectable," gasped the New Yorker. "What's the matter with you, anyway?"

"Well," said the up-State sulkily, "if they are respectable women, why are they eating away from their homes?"

The sophisticated New Yorker then elaborated for his guest the theory of the furnished room and "take-your-meals-out" syetem, which prevails among a large proportion of the women workers of New York, and explained that, so far as their dining rooms were concerned, the young women in question were probably as much at home as it was possible for them to be.

Many women, forced out of the home and into business by the economic changes of the past fifty years, have left their native towns and villages and come to New York to seek wider opportunities. This has created an army of absolutely unattached women and girls who sleep in what may be termed "spinster apartments" and eat all their meals, with the possible exception of breakfasts, at public restaurants. Even that class of art etudente and literary workers who formerly engaged in an elementary sort of housekeeping in studios have now taken to eating in public, owing to the constantly increasing difficulties and annoyances that beset the way of even the "light" housekeeper and the ease and simplicity of getting meals outside the home.

\+ + +

It is directly through this necessity of the women workers to get food downtown and in public eating houses that the custom has grown up among the women of the leisure classes to lunch at hotels and restaurants rather than at home. Within the last few years this custom hae become so universal that now when a woman wants to entertain a woman friend at luncheon she almost always invites her guest to a hotel or restaurant in preference to her own home. In cities where friende frequently live at almost prohibitive distances from each other it is so simple to appoint a common meeting place downtown for a luncheon together that many women have inaugurated the custom of doing all their visiting at restaurants. The magnificent distances of cities have also made the downtown department store lunchroom an absolute necessity to the woman shopper.

Will Run "Biltmore" Himself

(See Pictorial Section.)

GEORGE W. VANDERBILT will be his own manager of his big Biltmore estate when he returns this month from Bar Harbor, where he and his family are spending the Summer. Mrs. Vanderbilt is already at Biltmore House.

Upon Mr. Vanderbilt's return there will he a general shake-up in affairs. Tho changes that are to take place, it will be announced, are in the interest of "concentration and economy." In other words, Mr. Vanderbilt is going to cut down expenses. He is going to do away with the heads of his various departments—managers, Superintendents, &c.—and he is going to look after things himself.

Mr. Vanderbilt has maintained the finest truck farms in this country. He has lost a small-sized fortune in raising cabbages; potatoes, and other vegetables. He maintains a dairy, and virtually supplies Asheville and its vicinity with milk and butter. He has a piggery, a hennery, and many other similar departments on his big Biltmore estate, none of which has even begun tn pay. Mr. Vanderbilt's managers and Superintendents are paid all the way from $5,000 to $25,000 a year. Farming has been his hobby. He has stuck to it for more than ten years, hoping that in time the various departments on the estate would pay for themselves. There have been 300 or 400 employes, all on liberal salaries, and it has cost Mr. Vanderbilt a half million a year or more to keep up Biltmore. Now he is tired of it, and is going to give it up. He has been sufficiently amused.

With the end of the fiscal year this Fall, when Mr. Vanderbilt will take things in his own hands, he has announced that he is going to sublet. Thie means that he ie going to let out or rent Biltmore estate. The rumor that he is going to sell Biltmore is not confirmed.

It ie stated that Mr. Vanderbilt's losees at Biltmore have been so very heavy that it is more than likely that he will not go abroad this year, as has been his custom, hut will remain at Biltmore in order to carry out his present plans.

Mr. Vanderbilt has curtailed his expenses to some extent within the paet year by doing away with a number of the departments on the Biltmore estate. He has spent more time at Biltmore within the past year than ever before.

The Biltmore estate is the largest private estate in America. It conelsts nf 250,000 acres, and Mr. Vanderbilt's land runs through five counties and takes in a number of mountain peaks 5,000 and 6,000 feet high. The Biltmore land is situated in the heart of the proposed National Appalachian Park Reserve. It includes a large hunting preserve of 100,000 acres and a number of hunting lodges, where Mr. Vanderbilt and a large number of his friends spend some time every year during the season, fishing and hunting.

When Mr. Vanderbilt commenced "curtailing" expenses after he came home from Europe last year and saw how things were going, he announced that "hereafter" there would he an admission charged to visitors to Biltmore—foot passengers and bicycle passengers to pay 10 cents, horseback riders 25 cents, two-seated teams with not more than four persons 50 cents, three-seated teams 75 cents, coaches $1, $1.50, &c. This has proved a considerable source of revenue to Mr. Vanderbilt, as everybody who comes to Asheville wishes to go through Biltmore, and it is estimated that Mr. Vanderbilt's gate receipts from visitore are over $2,000 a month.

Farmers Are Buying Autos

NO one who has watched the development of the automobile can deny that the greateet opponent nf the new-fangled machine hae been the American farmer. The noisy, puffing cars have scared his horses and made the country roads uneafe for his family, but the indications are now that this attitude will soon be entirely changed.

The fact is that the farmer le taking to the automobile as he took to the telephone, and the wealthier among them at leaet to the small farm electric light plant. There is no class of Americans that is quicker to take to any real labor-eaving device than the farmer. He is forced to it by the scarcity and the increaeing price of farm labor, and anything which will save the hire of a man or two, and even more than that, the trouble of finding the man and keeping him when found, will be warmly welcomed.

The farmer has discovered that the automobile is a labor saver. The reason that he was so slow in doing so was that the automobile until recently was not built for his requiremente. It wae essentially a pleasure vehicle, more attention being paid to epeed and fine finish than to simplicity and duriability. The development of the working automobile in the cities has given the farmer the hint he was waiting for, and the power machine has begun to displace the horses in some of their duties on the farms.

There are two classes of machines especially suited to the farmer's use. One is the wagon of the light runabout type, which can be used by the truck farmer who has light loads to be transported quickly to the nearest market. This type of wagon can be used, too, for the daily errands in the village, and to much more advantage than the horse. It makes better time and keeps the driver a shorter time away from the field, and it does not withdraw the horse from the field work. Then there is the large, powerful vehicle of the auto truck type which is suitable for moving the heavier loads over the country roads. With a vehicle of this kind the farmer who is remote from a railroad is placed almost on an equality with the one who has the railroad at his door.

Several machines of both types have been sold to farmers and it is noticeable that the farmer is not seeking the cheap machine. This does not mean that he is anxious to spend money on finish and fine fixings, but he is willing to pay for the most durable and efficient machine on the market, and he demands above all simplicity in construction. In other words he wants a machine that he can repair himself if anything goes wrong, and not one that must be sent to a large town for the attention of a skilled machinery doctor every month or two.

SOCIETY AT HOME AND ABROAD

THERE is no abatement in the gayety of the suburban season. Town houses remain closed, and although their owners and occupants are often seen at the fashionable restaurants and theatres and in the shops, they will not come in until the festivities for Prince Louis of Battenberg and the Horse Show. In fact, there will be many country houses kept open until after Thanksgiving. It has been the fashion for years to pass this holiday in the country, which lends itself better to the charms of informal hearty hospitality.

Election day will be celebrated, according to present plans, by a steeplechase at the country seat of Gould Brokaw and possibly, if this does not conflict, with races at Meadow Brook. Just at present the hunting is taking up a great deal of the attention of the Long Island set. There are six hunts a week. The American foxhounds are employed on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, and the English on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. Saturday afternoon is usually the star hunt of the week. The meet is at 4 o'clock, and is preceded by a breakfast at the house of one or another member of the hunt. There has also been a number of meets in Orange County, where Robert L. Gerry has his private pack, in New Jersey, and in various parts of this State.

Mr. and Mrs. Belmont will not go to the Hot Springs until the last week of October, during which period the Duchess hopes to sail. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt are expected to arrive about Oct. 28.

+ + +

The end of the week saw several interesting events. The account of the wedding festivities of Ralph Pulitzer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Pulitzer, and Miss Frederica Webb, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb, at Shelburne Farms, yesterday is in another column. Country weddings have been very popular this year, and in many instances it has been arranged to have the villagers and tenantry and servants celebrate, as is done in England. So far there has been no attempt made to greet the bride and bridegroom on their return from their honeymoon, or on their visit to the bridegroom's home, with a triumphal arch and a dance on the green and speeches and presentation, but all this will come in time. Shelburne Farms is as much like an English estate as possible, and is one of the few country places in this country where there is shooting. Another country wedding of yesterday was that of Miss Ruth Howard, the younger daughter of Edward Tasker Howard, and Henri Anthony Louis Hoguet. The ceremony was very picturesque, and was held at Howard, New Canaan, Conn. In town Miss Charlotte Gillet, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmslie M. Gillet, was married to Arthur P. F. Adenaw at Trinity Chapel, and Miss Florence E. Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George B. Wilson, was married to Frederick A. Martens, at the Church of the Heavenly Rest.

+ + +

Among the weddings of this week will be that of Miss Marie C. Vyse, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Vyse, and Mr. Thomas Mason Rabourg. The ceremony will take place at St. Leo's Church, on East Twenty-eighth Street. The bride is a cousin of Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, and a very pretty girl. One of her sisters is Mrs. Lyon and another Mrs. Pendleton. Mr. Rabourg gave his bachelor dinner last week. His best man will be his brother, Mr. H. Mason Rabourg, and his ushers the Messrs. Newbold Morris, Ernest Iselin, Henry Worthington Bull, Lycurgus Winchester, Edmund Fairfax, James Cotting, and Henry Richmond Taylor, the son of Henry A. C. Taylor. Nearly all these men are married, and the list consequently presents somewhat of a novelty in wedding arrangements, as generally two, or three at most, are the number of married men serving as ushers.

+ + +

On Wednesday, in Washington, Miss Helen A. Bell, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Bell, will be married to Julian Ashton Ripley at St. Thomas's Church. The ceremony will be followed by a breakfast at Twin Oaks, the country residence of Mr. and Mrs. Bell, in Woody Lane, Washington. Mr. Ripley was one of the ushers at the recent wedding of Henry Rogers Winthrop and Miss Alice Babcock. His best man will be Mr. T. Dwight Ripley of Litchfield, Conn., and the ushers the Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin and Messrs. Henry Rogers Winthrop, Ashbel H. Barney, and Frank H. Simmons of this city and Gardner H. Bell of Washington, brother of the bride. Miss Grace H. Bell will be her sister's maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will be Miss Florence Dillon Wyckoff, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Peter Wyckoff of this city, Miss Zaidee C. Cobb, daughter of Mrs. Edmund M. Cobb, and Miss Hill of Washington.

+ + +

Miss Frances Pell, daughter of the late Mrs. Alfred Pell, and Major Archer Shee of the British Army, were married yesterday at the Pell country house at Highland Falls, N. Y. Mrs. Pell, who died a short time ago, was Miss Mary Huntington, and the Pell town residence was at 206 Madison Avenue. The wedding was a very quiet one, owing to the bride being in mourning. Major and Mrs. Archer Shee will live in England.

+ + +

Among the forthcoming marriages is that of Miss Emily Stuart Taylor, the granddaughter of Mrs. Pierre Lorillard and Ernest Wiltsee, which will take place this week in Paris. The wedding of Miss Lillian Fordyce Barker, daughter of Mrs. Fordyce Barker and a granddaughter of the late Samuel D. Babcock, for years President of the Chamber of Commerce, and Franklin Butler Lord, Jr., will take place at Grace Church on Oct. 30. Mr. Lord gives his bachelor dinner at Delmonico's on Oct. 21. The wedding of Miss Mary Honey and Josiah Quincy, the announcement of whose engagement was made last week, is set for Nov. 1 at Grace Church Chantry.

+ + +

Another marriage in late October will be that of Miss Nannie Nye Jackson of Newark and Lewis Stevens, 1st, of Castle Stevens, Hoboken, on Oct. 28, and this is to be followed on Nov. 1 by the nuptials of her sister, Miss Edith Jackson, and Thatcher Adams, Jr., of this city.

At the same time there has been announced the engagement of Miss Martha Nye Jackson, a cousin, and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Wolcott Jackson of Newark, N. J., to Lewis Stewart, the son of the late Judge Stewart of Trenton, N. J. The wedding of Miss Ruth L. Hoe, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hoe, and Robert Sterling will take place very quietly early in November. The family is in mourning and there will be no reception.

+ + +

Mr. Bagby has announced his musical mornings to be held at the Waldorf-Astoria on Mondays, Dec. 4, 11, 18, and Thursday, Dec. 28. Mr. Bagby has arranged with the Metropolitan Opera House authorities to have several of the celebrated stars appear at these well-known entertainments, which are always the meeting place of society at the beginning of each week during the season.

+ + +

The racing season ended yesterday, so far as society is concerned, with the last event for the Autumn at Belmont Park. The attendance has been excellent, and Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and other well-known whips have tooled the coach out every day from the Holland House. Among those who have been on various days at the clubhouse are Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Hastings, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Duryee, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Iselin, Mr. and Mrs. Seymour Le Grand Cromwell, and Mr. and Mrs. Van Rensselaer Kennedy. Mrs. James P. Kernochan has decided to close her cottage at Newport, and to remain until after Thanksgiving, as announced. Mrs. James L. Kernochan has been at Hempstead. She has let a part of her country place to Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont. August Belmont is improving rapidly from the effects of his operation. During the time that his condition was in the least serious his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, were with him.

+ + +

There are yet some Americans left abroad. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Berwind have been taking a long automobile trip. Mr. Berwind joined Mrs. Berwind in the beginning of September. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt has postponed her sailing once or twice. At latest accounts she was in England, where was also Mrs. Ogden Goelet. Mrs. Goelet had been visiting her daughter, the Duchess of Roxburghe, and Mrs. Vanderbilt and her children have also been guests at Floors Castle. One of the last bookings was dated Nov. 1, and then Mrs. Goelet had decided to come over to this country, although it had been stated that she would remain abroad this year. Mrs. Mackay and her sister, the Countess Telfener, have left England and are on the Continent. The Countess Telfener's health is much improved. Craig Wadsworth is in this country. He arrived last week. Mrs. Edmund Baylies has also sailed for this side. Her mother, Mrs. Van Rensselaer, and her sisters, Mrs. Johnson and Miss Van Rensselaer, returned some weeks ago from Bar Harbor. It is also stated that Mrs. Leiter will not sail for this side until the arrival of Lady Curzon from India. Lord and Lady Suffolk have been stopping with Mrs. Leiter at Claridge's. Ambassador and Mrs. Reid, after a series of country house visits, including Skibo Castle, Balmacaen, and Lord Lovat's place in Scotland, where the Phippses are installed, are at Wrest.

+ + +

The engagements of the week are most interesting. From London came the news of that of Miss Eloise Breese, daughter of Mrs. Higgins and the granddaughter of the late Judge Parsons of Columbus, Ohio, to Lord Willoughby de Eresby, the son of the Earl and Countess of Ancaster. Miss Breese's father was the late William Breese, a brother of James L. Breese and Miss Pussy Breese of this city and Tuxedo. Miss May Hadden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hadden, is engaged to Kenneth D. Robinson, a near relative of Douglas Robinson, who married Miss Roosevelt, a sister of the President. The engagement of Mr. Dulaney Howland, the son of the late G. G. Howland, to Miss Daisy McClure is also announced. Another interesting engagement was that of Miss Marie Harrison, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jared F. Harrison, to Mr. Joseph T. Gilbert of Gilbertsville, N. Y. Miss Harrison is a very accomplished and clever young woman, and a great favorite in society. Her sister is Mrs. Arthur Turnure. Both Mrs. Turnure and Miss Harrison have won many honors at golf. They are granddaughters of the late Chancellor Farnsworth of Michigan.

+ + +

Miss Eleanor Mortimer made her début on Friday evening at a dinner and dance given for her by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer of Tuxedo. Miss Mortimer was presented at court last Spring, the occasion being the second drawing room held by King Edward at Buckingham Palace. Miss Blanche Shoomaker was also presented on that occasion. Miss Mortimer is a great-granddaughter of Mrs. John Jay. Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer have taken a house on Fifth Avenue, where they will entertain this Winter.

+ + +

No definite plans have been made for the début of Miss Dorothy Whitney, the daughter of the late William C. Whitney. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney will take the matter in hand. Mrs. Barney will also entertain for her niece. There will probably be a dinner dance and a number of smaller entertainments. Mr. and Mrs. Almeric Paget will not come over this Winter, but remain abroad.

+ + +

So far it is stated that Mrs. Ogden Mills will give a house party in honor of Prince Louis of Battenberg at Staatsberg. The Prince will go to Mrs. Mills's after his visit at West Point. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who has been entertained by various German princely houses, the members of which are relatives of the Princess Louise of Battenberg, will also do entertaining in town. No other private entertainments have been arranged. Mrs. Vanderbilt, Sr., and Miss Vanderbilt remain at the Breakers, plans not being changed, until the Horse Show. Miss Vanderbilt and Mrs. Vanderbilt were of the Vanderbilt party at the Pulitzer-Webb wedding yesterday at Shelburne Farms.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

THE photograph of the Duchess of Marlborough reproduced in the Pictorial Supplement has never before been published. It is a striking likeness of the former Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, whose flowerlike beauty and gracious but dignified manners cause her to be acknowledged by Englishwomen to be one of the most beautiful peeresses in Great Britain.

The Duchess sailed yesterday morning for England. Her entire stay in this country was taken up with visiting her numerous friends and relatives. Nominally she made her residence with Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont, but she was continually on the go. She was at Hyde Park on Friday at a luncheon given for her by Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt, and on Thursday evening she was the guest of Col. and Mrs. William Jay. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont, who postponed their trip to the Hot Springs of Virginia, will go there this week. The Duchess consequently could not attend the Pulitzer-Webb wedding at Shelburne Farms.

Several days in each week since she arrived in New York the Duchess has lunched with friends at Delmonico's or Sherry's, and has also dined at the same smart restaurants. In every instance her gowns have been of girlish simplicity, and, although she has attracted much attention and the other guests at the restaurants have even gathered in small groups to observe her, she has apparently been as unconscious of it as though she were one of the observers instead of the observed.

+ + +

Mrs. W. A. Rembert Hall, whose picture appears in the Pictorial Supplement, was Miss Gertrude Luqueer Lane, who married Mr. Hall a couple of years ago. She is a great-great-granddaughter of Gen. Peter Van Zandt and granddaughter of Nacacius de Sille, Vice Governor of New York Town with Peter Stuyvesant. Together with her parents she spent before her marriage much time in Europe, especially in London and Paris, and has also been abroad with her husband since her marriage. The latter is a Southerner, a descendant of Gov. Lyman Hall of Georgia, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and he is also a grandson of the late Senator Robert Toombs. Mrs. Hall shares Mr. Hall's enthusiasm in all kinds of sports, including coaching and driving, and also duck shooting, wearing a leather suit and high boots when engaged in the latter sport.

Mrs. Hall has wavy dark-brown hair, large dark-blue eyes, and a full figure.

+ + +

Mrs. Jules Bache, whose picture may be found in the Pictorial Supplement, was Miss Florence Scheftel. Several years ago when the Baches were in London for the season Mrs. Arthur Paget took them about a great deal and entertained for them. Mrs. Bache is a very tall, slight woman with dark hair and eyes.

+ + +

Miss Evelyn Baker Schley, whose engagement to Max Powell Behr of Morristown was announced a few days since, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Grant Barney Schley of 845 Fifth Avenue and a sister of Grant B. Schley, Jr., who married Miss Jane Seney Plummer. The Schleys have a beautiful country place, Froh Heim, at Bernardsville, N. J. The Behrs have their home at Morristown, although for years they lived on Pierrepont Street, Brooklyn. Mr. Behr is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Hermann Behr, and the Yale lawn tennis champion, Karl H. Behr, is a younger brother.

+ + +

Mrs. Marie C. Eustis, whose engagement to the young musician Josef Hofmann has been a nine days' wonder, has one son by her former husband, whom she divorced. She is a daughter of James B. Eustis, at one time Ambassador to France, and married her first cousin, George Peabody Eustis, a brother of William Corcoran Eustis, who married Miss Edith Morton.

Mrs. Eustis is a fascinating rather than a handsome woman, and has always been extremely popular with men in society. Her maternal grandfather was at one time a steamboat Captain on the Mississippi, but he made a deal of money and retired, building a huge house in New Orleans, on the top of which was a cupola of such shape that his friends laughingly declared it was a copy of the pilot house on his steamboat, and was built by him as a reminder of old times.

+ + +

Miss Violet Cruger, whose picture appears in the pictorial section, is the daughter of Mrs. J. Frederic Tams by her first husband, Eugene V. R. Cruger. Miss Cruger is one of the beauties of society, and is well known not only in New York, Newport, and Tuxedo, but abroad. She is a golden blonde.

+ + +

Mrs. W. Julian de Bullet is a Baltimore woman, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. George Reuling, who spends the Summer at Narragansett Pier.

+ + +

Mrs. Frederic Duncan, whose picture is in the Supplement, is a sister of Emil and Charles Pfizer. Her husband has large manufacturing interests in Vienna, but they spend much time in London and also go nearly every Summer to Newport.

Autumn Hats and Gowns.

So far there is little that is new to chronicle in the gowns and hats now being worn. Many fashionable women are wearing the quietest of street gowns, and there is an absence of elaborate costumes such as are often seen in Winter at luncheons at smart restaurants, from which women often go to receptions, bridge parties, or musicales. People have not yet returned to their town houses, and of necessity many frocks worn in town at luncheons, and even at dinners, are simple, and in the latter case are gowns worn before and perhaps often.

Hats show more novelty than anything else sartorial, for the hats are assuredly new—at least many of them are, and it is in these new chapeaus that unexpected touches appear, or radically new shapes and effects compared with those of the Summer.

The small hat tipped forward and to one side with large cachepeignes and but little trimming on top is still with us and likely to be, for those whom it suits are loath to give it up, but other styles are newer.

The large hat with most of its greatest width of brim standing out at the back is not gaining favor. It was the latest Parisian fancy, but it is too trying, and in most cases outré, in effect to gain much ground or to hold that which it had. Mrs. Philip Lydig wears one of the most pronounced examples of this new mode.

The trimmed derby, as it might well be called, is seen on some fashionable women. One seen at a smart restaurant at the luncheon hour was a green beaver and had a stiff, quite large and high picquet of fine green feathers rising at the left side a bit nearer the front than the rear. These hats are quite large, but shaped like a derby or riding hat.

+ + +

A smart purple velvet hat in a rich deep shade was worn by Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., while lunching with her sister-in-law, the Duchess of Marlborough. It was a much smaller hat than Mrs. Vanderbilt usually affects. It had a round crown and quite a width of brim at the front. It rolled hardly at all at the back, but a little at the left, and was tilted only slightly over her brow. The sole trimming was a soft, high picquet of purple coq feathers flattened against the left side.

The small hat of the Duchess of Marlborough was a very dark blue crinoline tricorne, or, rather, a cross between a colonial and a tricorne, for the brim was rolled back at the left front, and one loose-petaled rose in several shades of pale and deep pink was caught in it. From this rose, slanting slightly toward the back, was a pale blue bird of paradise algrette. Where the hat was rolled up at the back three more of the pink loose-petaled roses were caught.

+ + +

One of the latest French fancies, but one which will certainly not become popular here, is a large hat with a soft velvet crown and a wide brim of beaver, with a large bird on the brim. This brim is very wide on the left, but much narrower at the right, where a white bird is perched, with its feet on the edge of the crown, which is flattened down at that point. The bird is arranged so that it is looking over the brim with its beak under the edge, as though taking a peep at the wearer of the chapeau. The particular hat mentioned is in dark gray. The crown is a bit darker than the beaver brim, and the only trimming, aside from the white bird, is folds of the gray velvet at the base of the crown. The bandeau at the left and back is covered with chous and bows of gray velvet.

Miss Edith Lounsbery is wearing an almost flat black hat tilted well to the right. At the left of the very low crown and near the front is a single large pink rose, from which a single long black ostrich plume trails across the hat over to the left and down the side toward the back. The lifted left side and back are filled in with some soft black stuff.

A beautiful hat just brought over by its owner is tilted way down on the right side and up at the left, but it has a brim broad all the way round. It is a soft, pale pink, smooth-finished beaver, with an inch high crown, the brim being about five inches wide. At the front is a huge flat rosette formed of pink velvet ribbon an inch and a quarter wide. These velvet loops shade through many different tints of pink from pale to dark, there being from one to three loops of each shade. This rosette covers the ends of two wide ostrich plumes, one pale and the other a much deeper pink. The paler one is at the outside and sweeping over the brim droops at the left side, while the other and deeper one runs along the crown and inner edge of the brim and droops off the back. The cachepeigne is covered with small, soft pink velvet roses in different shades, including several buds with light green moss as a setting.

Another and extremely artistic hat is a large affair of black velvet. It has a very wide brim and a round crown two inches high. The hat is so set on the head that it slants right down the right side and up at the left from almost the centre of the head, but where it rises it curves in and forms a hollow, sweeping curve. The edge of the brim has a deep fold an inch and a quarter wide, also of black velvet, set on the edge. Liberty satin ribbon three inches broad and in pure white is twisted carelessly twice around the crown, once near the base of the crown and again near the top. Two very wide, full, and rather short black ostrich feathers have their ends thrust through the crown near the left front; their tips fall over the drooping right side and end on a line below the ear. The bandeau is a very narrow one of equal width all the way around, and is covered with folds of black tulle.

Three-fourths of the street and carriage costumes are made with Eton coats. For years this popular and almost universally becoming jacket has been worn, and there are no signs of diminution of its popularity among both the smart and the very ordinary dressers.

While long, fitted coats suit fine figures better, their skirt portions make them cumbersome to wear, especially when walking, and the additional weight and warmth are by no means always desirable. The warmth of the long coat in cold weather may be offset when the Eton model is selected by wearing an extra or heavier petticoat.

Many of the new Etons for even cold weather have sleeves of little more than elbow length, but these will not be worn for walking when snow flies, unless heavy furs, including a large muff, are worn and carried to protect the lower arms.

The tailored half-length, three-quarter-fitting coat, with skirts to match, made in the severest possible fashion with plain coat sleeves, are in evidence on fashionable women for traveling and shopping, and numbers of them are still seen in the smart restaurants at the luncheon hour.

The half and three-quarter length coats in more dressy designs are also seen, but only one of these is worn to eight of the ubiquitous Eton. The longer coat is harder to fit and has when properly fitted more distinction not only from its greater dignity of style, but also from the fact that comparatively few of them are seen in dressy styles.

+ + +

Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., lunching at a smart Fifth Avenue restaurant, wore a cream white broadcloth costume having a sweeping skirt and three-quarter coat with fitted top, and gathered skirts set on a straight-around belt, also of cloth. The skirt was very long, sweeping out a little at the back, and was trimmed about the bottom with embroidery or braiding, also cream white. This skirt had the effect of being tight at the top, and of being gored to give the fullness at the bottom.

The coat top appeared to be seamless in the back, but had, going over each shoulder and slanting in toward the centre at the waist line, a series of seven or eight tucks on the rib order. The plain belt, stitched to the coat, had a diamond formed of tucks in the centre back. The sleeves were wide and on the coat order, with turned-back cuffs, embroidered or braided to match the skirt. The coat skirts were gathered around the top, where they were joined to the belt, and the skirt fell in graceful folds, describing a tunic effect, forming points at the front and curving up slightly from the points to the sides, and thence down to the centre back. The lower edge of the coat also showed the braiding. With this costume she wore the purple velvet hat described above.

Mrs. Peter D. Martin, who was Miss Lily Oelrichs, was in town a few days before leaving with her husband and child for the Pacific slope, where they are to remain some weeks before sailing for Europe, where they purpose spending the Winter. She wore at a luncheon with the Duchess of Marlborough and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., a white and black checked costume, the black lines dividing the white background into quarter-inch checks, being the width of a pin head. The costume comprised an Eton jacket and long skirt, both trimmed with bias bands of the material piped and arranged in semi-scroll effects. She wore a rather small toque to match the gown.

+ + +

The Duchess of Marlborough wore a light, dull blue chiffon broadcloth, having a dull finish. The shade of blue was much deeper than cadet, more of a regular army blue.

The coat opened with revers to show a very high stock and deep vest effect of the under blouse in white.

The coat top had its back in one piece, a deep plait being laid in each side and stitched every quarter inch, slanting from near the centre of the waist line out over the shoulders beyond the shoulder line. The plaits were not stitched to the coat, but separately, and extended down the front. The coat skirts were set on to the top, but were bias, so that they were tight about the hips and fell in fluted folds, describing deep points at the bottom in the back and at the sides and front. A band of bias tucks, each less than a quarter of an inch in width and that distance apart, was laid around the lower part of the coat skirts, perhaps three inches from the edge. The sleeves were simple, moderately wide, gathered at the top, and ending midway between elbows and wrists, where they were finished by bands of tucking.

The skirt of the costume swept out in the back, and had, say, two or three inches from its edge, some twelve or fifteen narrow tucks, in band fashion, as its only trim decoration. Her hat was the dark-blue tricorne, with shaded pink roses and pale-blue algrette, fully described above.

+ + +

Miss Katherine McCann, lunching at Sherry's, wore a rich red cloth of light weight, made in an Eton jacket and short skirt. The skirt had its top to below the hip line laid in half-inch plaits stitched at their edges and making the skirt glove fitting to that point. The released plaits gave much fullness to the rest of the skirt, which was finished with a deep hem and had also a three-inch tuck some sixteen inches from the hem.

The little jacket had a square effect, which Miss McCann's slight figure can stand. It had a deep yoke extending down over the shoulders and overlapping the tops of the sleeves, the overlapping effect extending across the back and front. This yoke was edged with a fold of cloth or a line of fine braid and curved a trifle in the back. The body of the jacket, which extended down over the top of the belt, was laid in deep box plaits, two in the back, pressed flat. The wide sleeves ended a little above the wrists in rather moderately deep, round cuffs of the turned-back effect.

The chapeau worn was black, turned back in the front and having one large quill with gold centre placed across the front.

A simple little house dress, and one easily copied, is of pale tan voile having dots an inch long and four inches apart on its surface. The bodice is cut in a modified surplice as it closes straight down the front under a box-plaited ruching of inch-wide satin ribbon the color of the dots. The neck is cut out round at the back and outlines an open V in front, which is filled in with a gulmpe of yellow lace with a Dutch neck. The box-plaited ribbon going up the front extends around the entire neck of the bodice. In the back the material is gathered a bit at the neck line and more at the waist line, where the gathers are drawn in at the centre, and the whole, of course, is set on over a tight-fitting lining. In the front also the tops are slightly gathered at the shoulder line and at the bottom the fullness is drawn toward the centre. The girdle is a shaped one about an inch and a half wide and is formed of several widths of the satin ribbons plaited on to a foundation that closes in the front with a gilded buckle.

The skirt has its fullness around the top laid in tiny tucks half an inch apart, these tucks extending down some four inches over the back and the hips and about two inches in front. The skirt touches all around and has a flounce some fourteen inches wide at the bottom. This flounce is a scanty affair and has at its lower edge a box-plaited ruffle of satin ribbon two inches wide, and at its top ribbon an inch and a half wide is set on and tacked at the top at intervals to the skirt itself. Where this top ribbon joins the gathering of the flounce the joining is concealed by a twist of the inch-wide ribbon. Extending from this top ruffle to that at the bottom are inch-wide box-plaitings of the narrow ribbon describing Vs. These Vs are ten inches apart at their points at top and bottom. All of the ribbon used is of the same shade.

The sleeves are moderately large and have a silk foundation that holds them out well. They are gathered in at the armholes and are also gathered in tight to the arm about two inches below the elbow under a box plaiting of ribbon an inch and a half wide, then come three-inch cuffs or bands of the volle laid in three tucks, and at the lower edge of each band is an inch-wide box plaiting of ribbon.

An inch-wide ribbon plaiting also starts from the top of the sleeve at the outside, and separating forms a wide oval, the ends crossing at the bottom, and midway from shoulder to elbow they go around the arm and come down the inside to the plaiting on the cuff. This ruching separates the sleeve above the elbow into two slightly marked puffs.

The hat to be worn with this gown was much the shape of an inverted soup plate, the wider part forming an equally turned-down brim, but being raised from the head by a bandeau.

The hat itself was of yellow chip, and around its crown was a plain band of brown velvet arranged in the straightest of flat bows at the left side. The bandeau was of brown velvet and was very wide at the left and back. Across the upper part of the bandeau and touching the hat brim, and also all around the lower edge of the bandeau, were shaded yellow velvet roses forming a cachepeigne, in which the brown velvet showed only as a separating line less than an inch wide. A cream lace face veil to be worn like a valance also goes with the hat, and cream-colored glacé gloves to the elbow.

One of the newest things in hats was in evidence at Delmonico's at the luncheon hour. The shape was that of an enlarged derby such as women wear when riding horseback. The crown was bowl-shaped, larger than that of a regular riding hat, while the brim was much wider and rolled less at the sides. It was a rich olive green velvet, the velvet being perfectly smooth, and a cluster of two very full, moderately long green ostrich plumes started from the left side near the middle and tumbled off the side and back. A fold of velvet went around the crown and another through a greenish bronze buckle covered the bases of the feathers.

+ + +

One of Mrs. Clarence Mackay's Autumn hats is a very large one of black crinoline, trimmed with black tulle, and having masses of black ostrich tips at the right side, from the centre of which rises a bird of paradise algrette. Black ostrich plumes also fall over the back, which goes a considerable distance from the head, with tulle and tips underneath.

+ + +

An odd gown of claret-red chiffon broadcloth for a young girl has the double skirt or tunic effect. The effect is produced by setting a twelve-inch flounce of the cloth simply hemmed on to the red silk foundation and having the skirt proper droop over its top. This tunic is gathered slightly at the waist line, more in the back than elsewhere, and eight inches from its hem there are three one-inch tucks an inch apart. Across the tunic in the front at the knee line there is an applique of Irish lace, and at the sides it curves up some eight inches to the centre back.

The girdle is a narrow-shaped one of folds of the cloth, and the bodice is a surplice in the front but quite flat and almost plain in the back. A band of the Irish lace three inches wide is set in the back just above the belt and going around under the arms, curves up in front of them following the arm's eye and terminating in the shoulder seam. A guimpe and stock of the Irish lace is to be worn with this, and strappings of the cloth an inch wide and stitched six times extend the length of the shoulder seams, going over the end of the Irish lace.

The sleeves are three scant puffs of the cloth. In the upper puffs a bit of the Irish lace two inches wide runs from the shoulders to the bottom of the puffs. The middle puffs are plain, and each of these is the widest of the three forming each sleeve. The lowest puff is not over an inch and a half wide and under a two-inch band of the lace over cloth, from under this band fall two very full ruffles of some simple white lace.

MARIE WELDON.

Gray cloth costume trimmed with gray braided, dotted with black pastilles. Guimpe of tucked cord red chiffon. Black hat with coral colored tips.

Evening wrap of black panne cloth faced with a deep border of white fur. Sleeves and side panels of double ruffles of white chiffon over cloth of silver.

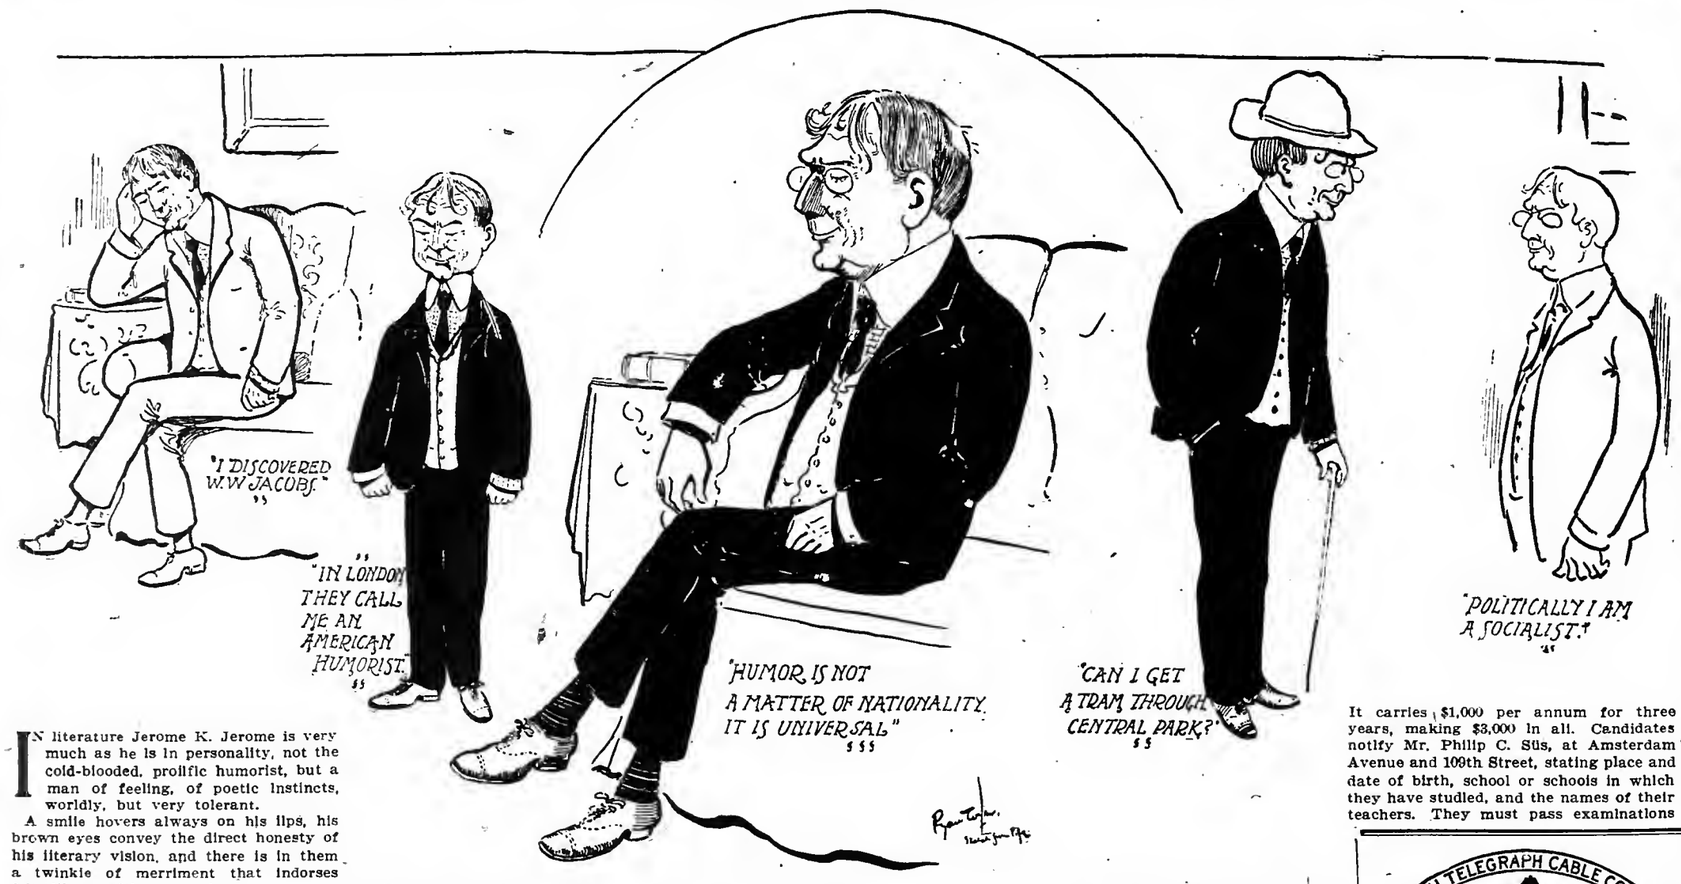
Jerome K. Jerome in Confidential Mood



IN literature Jerome K. Jerome is very much as he is in personality, not the cold-blooded, prolific humorist, but a man of feeling, of poetic instincts, worldly, but very tolerant.

A smile hovers always on his lips, his brown eyes convey the direct honesty of his literary vision, and there is in them a twinkle of merriment that indorses friendliness with man or beast.

There is a suggestion of George Grossmith about Jerome K. Jerome when you first see him, and a certain quaint stolidity of manner, a quiet, good-natured raillery that is quite in the style of James Whitcomb Riley. His accent is English of the London stamp, but he is more in sympathy with the American quality of tolerance and imaginative stress than the usual Englishman.

He is the sort of man who has the dignity of trustworthiness in his make-up, the type to whom men confide their secrets and women confess their troubles, because he has the sympathetic quality of the artist without artistic egotism.

In England he is the "intimate friend of an intimate friend," who knows every one worth knowing in London, because they regard him as an entertaining guest and as an irresistible friend. Before he left London for his first trip to America, the night before he sailed J. M. Barrie gave him a farewell dinner. Every one knows what Barrie represents in matters of temperamental association, and if I were trying to fasten upon a man an illuminative aureole of character and nature I could say no better of him than this: "Barrie is fond of him." Of course, from our American method of superficial observations it is evident that there are anglicisms about Jerome that will evaporate in the clear blue ether of these United States.

+ + +

He cannot persist in calling a street car a "tram," for instance, without some trouble, sooner or later, with an Irish conductor. Then again, he will become so used to a skyline that he will not look upward in surprise, as they all do in London on those rare occasions when the sky is visible.

He obtained his first view of New York from the tower of The Times Building.

"In London we could not see anything but smoke," he said, as some one pointed out the Statue of Liberty to him. He focused his gaze for some time on a roof garden.

"You don't have those things in London?"

"There was one once. A chap who had lived in Japan opened something of the kind in South Kensington, and it looked very pretty, with its Japanese lanterns—and smoke. The first few ladies who went up there only stayed long enough to see their dresses turn black and then vanished hurriedly. No, the roof garden is impossible in London."

Mr. Jerome was next asked what he "thought of New York?" and he expressed his gratitude by saying that he hoped to proffer an opinion as soon as one could be found that had not been used before.

"How high is this building?" he inquired.

"Three hundred and sixty-five feet," was the answer.

"Ah! that is exactly the height of St. Paul's Cathedral in London. Our newspaper offices are comfortable enough, but, of course, they don't go in so much for architecture as this; it's a great building. Were many men killed in putting it up?" He leaned over the tower railing as he said this.

"A man in London fell off a building the other day, and after killing another man who was passing, by falling on him, walked away unhurt. The Coroner's problem was to decide whether it was a case of murder." He paused a moment to adjust his glasses, while the Jerome smile haunted his expression.

"What was the verdict?" asked some one.

"It was agreed that the man who couldn't get out of the way met an accidental death, and that the other man should be fined for misdemeanor."

+ + +

With the Englishman's retiring instinct he selected a quiet hotel.

"I was told that my room, also, was the quietest corner of the house," he said, "and I was awakened by a brass band that played election melodies most of the night; it was very peaceful."

+ + +

But Jerome K. Jerome understands the American point of view, and will, no doubt, enjoy it still more, on this, his first visit.

"In London they accuse me of having adopted American humor," he said, "but I never think that humor is a matter of nationality; it comes, it is born; it is universal. There is a superstition, for instance, that no man who writes books can write plays; that is an evidence of international humor. Then there are places on the map which are customarily regarded as dark spots in civilization, entirely without humor. Russia is looked upon as a country steeped in gloom and explosives, and yet my play "Miss Hobbs" was very successful there. No, humor is not distinctively national. There are people with humor, and without it, and both kinds are independently happy. Of course the humorist likes the people with humor better than the others, and yet, he usually belongs to the serious sort himself. The humorist is primarily a philosopher, and then it is no longer possible to write successfully without humor. The solemnities of life are still quite as serious, but they must be veneered with pleasantry, losing nothing in tragic values thereby."

The philosophic strain is a vivid element in the analysis of Mr. Jerome's humor, and when I pointed out this suggestion in his work he was pleased.

"I try to do just that; your humorous writer must be something of a thinker, you know," he said.

+ + +

In England they do not address him with the identifying prefix; it is not Jerome K. Jerome, but Mr. Jerome, the playwright and author. This is because in England ties are closer, the author cannot get very far from his reader, there is a neighborhood intimacy that spreads over the entire island, and then, too, Jerome means as much to Englishmen as Mark Twain does to Americans.

+ + +

"There were peges and columns about me in the newspapers the day after I arrived, but I have not yet found anything that I said to the interviewers in them. However, I have not yet read them all. I asked the young woman at the newsstand to give me the smallest Sunday paper she had, and I don't suppose there are any, because she couldn't find one that weighed less than eight or ten pounds. It is amazing the quantity of humor America turns out. I suppose some day when they have convalesced from the raging fever of accumulation they will begin to think why they made so much, such shiploade of jokes and humorous rhyme. Of course they can't really think about it much yet. Every reporter I saw asked me for a good story or an anecdote; it was very surprising what an inexhaustible demand there must be for funny things."

Since he was 14 Jerome K. Jerome has earned his own way in the world. He is not a college man, and does not regret this educational omission.

"Perhaps I should not have known as much if I had been a college man. I live near Oxford, and see them in an evolutionary and even in a graduating state, and they all seem to be cut of the same cloth, made on the same plan, to avoid any vulgar originality."

The author of "Three Men in a Boat" began as a reporter, then became what is known as a free lance—an independent knight of the quill, tilting his brains in open combat with available editors. He wrote for four or five newspapers and weeklies. Then for five years he was a dramatic critic, leaving this stool of literary repentance when he found he could write plays.

"There is a great demand for good plays in England," he said, "a demand which could easily be satisfied if the writers over there would only write them, but they won't because of the uncertainty of production, the long, tedious delay in securing even a reading. The name of a popular or successful author attached to a play means nothing to the producers. They will not look at manuscripts, they give importance only to the plays that have had a performance. The consequences of this are obvious; many men who are competent to write plays don't care to take the risk. Then there is a great deal of nonsense talked about an author's ignorance of stage technique. I think almost any intelligent man can learn enough to write an actable play after a week's study of the theatres."

+ + +

Mr. Jerome does not share mysterious cants of any kind; his philosophies and his broad perspective of life revealed a basis of Socialism in his conclusions. He acknowledged that politically he was a Socialist.

"I find myself in very good company with men like George Meredith, for instance, and, obviously, Bernard Shaw," he said; then he expressed a reason for Shaw's incomprehensibility. "Bernard Shaw is a man of great heart and brilliant mind. He married a rich wife, and there is nothing in his home life to inspire his peculiar brilliances."

It was one Israel Zangwill who said to Bernard Shaw last year: "Look here, old man, you are old enough to stop clowning and do serious work."

Mr. Jerome, treating Shaw with the same tolerant philosophy that he does every one and everything, seemed to think that his brain was too active, and outpaced his heart.

"In England audiences expect certain traditious, certain dramatic consistencies that Shaw violates, and they don't understand his plays on that account."

"What sort of man is J. M. Barrie?" I asked.

"If he feels like talking, he is the most delightful, entertaining man to hear. He talks well, illuminates everything he says with a quiet, sweet wit. Once he gets started there is no stopping him, no one else in the room gets a chance, and then frequently he will be absolutely silent, and no one can get a word out of him."

+ + +

W. W. Jacobs is quite another type.

"I rather feel that I discovered Jacobs," said Mr. Jerome. "He had been sending his manuscripts about for years without encouragement. I had not read ten lines before I was laughing, and wrote him at once to know if he had any more of the same sort. Jacobs is a very solemn-looking chap, dark, serious. When he was a boy his father was employed in the Custom House, and it was there he absorbed material for his quaint sea stories."

Jerome K. Jerome has made a version of a French play by Jules Lemaitre, and if an actress can be found who is capable of the part Mr. Frohman is to produce it.

The first reading from his own stories will be given by Mr. Jerome at the Empire Theatre next Tuesday afternoon. He has never appeared except for charity in England since he became an author of celebrity, although in his early struggles he was an actor in a small repertoire company that toured the provinces.

The Whistling Song (Pfeiflied)

in Josef Strauss's "Fruehlingsluft."

It has made a distinct "hit" at the Irving Place Theatre—Soon everybody will be whistling it on the Street.

ART NOTES.

A very appreciative review of the works and methods of Albert P. Ryder will be found in the current number of Broadway under the title, "A Painter of Dreams." The article contains reproductions of a number of ideal creations from the easel of Albert Ryder, which have never been seen in New York, and are now in the private galleries of Sir William C. Van Horne and E. C. Greenshields of Toronto. This painter has a small but devoted following among the artists and collectors of the United States and Canada. At present all his pictures are taken in advance of completion, so that for the coming year he will be unable to start anything new. Ryder works with extreme slowness and reaches color effects of marvelous depth and delicacy by a thoroughly individual method of painting. He is an Associate of the National Academy and one of the charter members of the Society of American Artists, but for many years he has shown nothing at the annual exhibitions.

To fill the post of Director of the Victoria and Albert Museum at South Kensington vacated by Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, an officer has been promoted who has been Assistant Director since 1896. This is Mr. Arthur Banks Skinner, who joined the museum in 1879. He is an old and trusted employe of the South Kensington, and will continue the policy of the museum as it is now administered.

A portrait of Edouard Pailleron, the playwright, author of "Le Monde ou l'On s'Ennuie" and other comedies, painted by John S. Sargent, has been offered by its owner, the wife of the dramatist, to the museum at Versailles. Pailleron lived at Versailles.

The National Academy of Design will hold its eighty-first annual show from Dec. 22 to Jan. 20 at the Fine Arts Galleries, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street. Pictures will be received Dec. 4, 5, and 6. The free schools of the Academy are open at the old quarters, Amsterdam Avenue and 100th Street, Manhattan. This year the E. L. Mooney Memorial will decree for the second time the traveling scholarship of $700 per year for two years to a member of the Academy schools who meet the requirements of the jury. The Jacob H. Lazarus scholarship for the study of mural painting abroad will be competed for again in Paris, with text by Ferri and Jacobsen.

Wiertz, the Belgian painter of the weird and of surprises, and tricks in painting, is to have a heroic statue in bronze erected to his memory in Dinant, his birthplace. The sculptor de Hène has modeled him with his romantic mantle thrown over the shoulder, his palette in one hand and brush in the other. The figure will stand on a rock about ten feet high.

+ + +

The Edinburgh Architectural Association issues a fine catalogue with illustrations for the exhibition of photographs lent by the Brooklyn Museum of Arts and Sciences. The text is by Mr. William Henry Goodyear, who arranged the series in the Brooklyn Museum, of which he is Curator.

+ + +

Circulating exhibitions of the work of scholars in the various art schools of France are planned for the coming year. A selection of the best work in all the schools will be brought together in Paris by the management of the Ecole des Beaux Arts and sent on a tour through the provinces, where the chosen pieces will be shown at the various museums.

It carries $1,000 per annum for three years, making $3,000 in all. Candidates notify Mr. Philip C. Süs, at Amsterdam Avenue and 109th Street, stating place and date of birth, school or schools in which they have studied, and the names of their teachers. They must pass examinations in perepective, artistic anatomy, and the painting of the nude from life.

Argentina has produced a rarity of a certain kind in a Secretary of Legation who not only loves art, but practices it. Mr. Herman Cullen, Secretary of the Argentine Legation at Rome, and pupil of the sculptor Biondi, has been showing his sculptures to the dilettanti, including a bas-relief of "Autumn," and a male figure in the round called "Sorrow." He is about to return to Buenos Ayres and devote himself to sculpture.

Eighteen sheets of drawing paper, containing sixty sketches by Michael Angelo, have been discovered in old portfolios at the Uffizi in Florence by Prof. Ferri, the Director, and Dr. Emil Jacobsen. Among them are studies for the figures on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel in Rome, studies for the "Night" and the seated figures in the Chapel of the Medicis in Florence, for the "Slave," and for the "Moses" in the Lateran at Rome, and sketches also for the "Last Judgment" in the Sistine. They are to be published by Hiersemann

JEROME K. JEROME IN AN AUTHOR'S LECTURE,
Tuesday afternoon at the Empire Theatre,

"THE ROMANCE OF A HINDOO PRINCESS,"
a dramatic spectacle by Frederic Thompson, Wednesday evening at the Hippodrome.

IN OUR review of "John Bull's Other Island" printed the morning after the play's production, we remarked that with Shaw it becomes more and more evident that it is all in the point of view. If we had previously had any doubts upon that subject the various and varying opinions of the new play expressed in the columns of our contemporary makers of one-day history would have served to convince us. So let us hasten to reaffirm that it is all in the point of view. And to have a point of view—an intelligent point of view—that justifies any expression of opinion at all, one must do some thinking. There is, then, just this to be said about Mr. Shaw, and, incidentally, about "John Bull's Other Island": It will make even the most cavalier of the Irishman's critics sit up and take notice. Underneath the flippant discussion of his work one may always discern signs of some sort of mental disturbance. And the power to create such a disturbance is, we take it, a very valuable and very desirable asset in an author, whether he writes histories, poems, romances, or plays.

+ + +

For a very long period of time one of the gravest and truest charges hurled against the English drama has involved the questions of our playwrights' paucity of ideas and their incapacity to produce works that justify any sort of serious consideration. There has always been a faction, to be sure, that has held to the opinion that the playhouse was not a place for thinkers, and that entertainment—indisputably a primary factor in the development of a theatre at all—and mental activity could not or should not be combined. But such a contention is not entitled to even passing comment. George Bernard Shaw is not a playwright in the ordinary sense of the word, and having had occasion time and again to pass judgment upon works written by men who claim consideration under that head, we are not unwilling to join in the Irishman's rejoicings that he does not belong to their class. Let us have well-constructed plays, by all means, if we can get them. Let us have our dramatists conform to all the rules and regulations of the craft. Let us have our plays technically correct and structurally efficient. But let us first see that our dramatists are engaged with material that makes the application of sound art principles worth while. We want form in our drama, by all means, but let us have thoughts first. Let us have naked ideas if our dramatists have not the skill to clothe them properly. We have waited long enough for men who could give us vital truths in our plays. So let us not be deaf to the voice, even if it is not too precise in the method of its utterance. We have listened to dozens of well-constructed plays—plays put together most excellently according to the prescribed formula, with each part most properly fitted, and grooved, and dovetailed, and set in place with all precision and nicety. We have seen these plays come and go, some failing at the very outset, others enjoying an ephemeral sort of popularity. And as time has passed they, too, have passed, and their titles are forgotten, the names of their skillful makers unremembered.

We can have no quarrel with the men who demand a technical exhibit in the drama, for we have declared more than once that no art is susceptible to development where there is a disregard of the laws. We, too, have deplored the fact that Mr. Shaw, writing for the theatre, will not conform to the rules of the game. But we also insist that as between most of the playwrights, who do so conform, and who give us almost nothing, and Mr. Shaw, who does not conform, and who always gives us something, there is not much doubt left as to where the choice should lie.

It is altogether possible—indeed, we feel it is a certainty—that Mr. Shaw's present popularity in the theatre is something of a fad. But what does that prove? Does it detract in the least from the permanent value of his writings? Is it a reflection on the playwright or on the general state of mind? "John Bull's Other Island" will probably fail to enjoy any large or lasting popularity. But "Arms and the Man" failed, and "The Devil's Disciple" failed, and to the prophets of those times George Bernard Shaw was a dead issue. But Mr. Shaw was not dead. His is the vital spark.

Just why Nietzche, and Schopenhauer, and Ibsen should be dragged into a discussion of "John Bull's Other Island," as has been done in several instances, it is difficult to understand, for whatever Mr. Shaw's previous indebtedness to those philosophers, there is nothing in the theme or the treatment of this Irish-English study to suggest a borrowing of their ideas. It begins to look as though we had here the application of the old idea that any stick is good enough to beat a dog with. Fortunately, in this case the dog is so large and strong and healthy, and his teeth are of such exceeding sharpness, that he may be trusted to take care of himself without any outside assistance. But these things are apart from the main fact that in "John Bull's Other Island" Mr. Shaw has created a work of amazing satirical brilliancy.

It is argued that Mr. Shaw's weakness lies in the fact that, though he is able to show us the incongruities of existence, he is unable to suggest rational ideas for their abatement or modification. This is exactly the attitude which Ibsen's critics used to assume—which, in fact, they still assume whenever the opportunity for discussion offers. But how is there to be any progress if those whose eyes are open do not give voice to their thought until they are ready to propose the solution? And as a matter of fact, does not Mr. Shaw offer a solution which most of his critics have overlooked? What does his unfrocked priest signify? Is he not a symbol of a larger, truer, better, and more spiritual outlook on life? The question here is not whether Mr. Shaw is sincere or not in his belief in this idea. He is preaching the doctrine of spiritual redemption through a less selfish mode of living, through a less persistent following of material aims and ends.

But it is not Mr. Shaw, the philosopher, who is to be essentially considered in a discussion of his acted work. As a Nation we overestimate our sense of humor. We are almost totally lacking in the ability to appreciate satire. There has always been a limited audience for such work, for instance, as "The Admirable Crichton," but if, as a Nation, we were alive to the keen strokes of informed and analytical humorists, such a play would appeal to crowded houses for months. It did nothing of the sort.

"John Bull's Other Island" will be another case in point. The most amazing part of its reception is the misconception which seem to exist in minds ordinarily keen in matters of discrimination. The scene of Broadbent's proposal to Nora, for example, would certainly appear to be plain enough. Broadbent is overpowered by her beauty and the charm of her Irish voice—he is completely befuddled, and Mr. Shaw, we think, makes it evident in this and in the scenes preceding and following that the Englishman is not really in a state of spirituous intoxication. Consider Broadbent as drunk, and the scene is not funny—it is coarse and vulgar. But the audience at the Garrick obviously found it nothing of the sort. The laughter was apparently exactly the laughter which Mr. Shaw expected. To our amazement, therefore, we find reviewers, whose powers of analysis are usually quite trustworthy, making a point of Mr. Shaw's vagueness in failing to indicate at the outset that his John Bull was "under the influence."

If Mr. Shaw wants a brief for his side of the case against the Irishman he could not do better, we think, than to read the study of his play from the viewpoint of one who, obviously of his own people, has not learned to see the joke when it is at his own expense. Therein we find it argued that the play was a success in England because of "its glorification of the stolid supremacy of the English. * * * It is a brief for John Bull's stamping of his heel on the British Isle. * * * Thomas Broadbent appears with all his British hoggishness."

Now, if Mr. Shaw has done one thing in this play, he has treated both sides with equal fairness. The play is mostly talk, to be sure, but it is bright talk and honest talk that cannot fail to appeal to alert minds and minds not too set in their opinions to be able to give every man's views a fair share of consideration. Little happens at any time, the characters come and go, discuss and preach, palaver and chatter. But the chatter is happy and the preaching sane. And even those who are firmest in the belief that Mr. Shaw is only a purveyor of his own doctrines through the mouths of his characters must admit that he gives himself considerably the worst of it in this play.

Larry Doyle is the symbol for Bernard Shaw. But Larry, and every one else in "John Bull's Other Island," appears cheap in comparison with the mystic priest, whose wisdom is the wisdom of something more than worldly experience—whose beauty of thought is suggestive at least of some sort of divine inspiration. If the play had nothing more to commend it than this one poetic figure it would deserve to live as literature, as, indeed, it is pretty certain to live.

With its brilliancy of satire it is much too far above the average head to continue long as a popular acted play. As the matter goes, however, it would have stood a better chance of success if reverence for Mr. Shaw had not affected the better practical judgment of its producers. There are pages upon pages in the manuscript which, whatever their other value, should have been omitted from the acted version. Mr. Shaw, having himself prepared "Man and Superman" for stage representation, tacitly admits the necessity for submitting to the process which has made Shakespeare available for the modern stage. The effect of his own work in the theatre would be greatly increased by a judicious use of the knife. There can be no doubt whatsoever that the employment of a more informed dramatic art form would correspondingly advance Mr. Shaw's value as a playwright. But in the meantime let us be thankful that a man of his calibre has found it worth while to write for the theatre at all.

Of the acting all that need be said at this time is that it is generally sympathetic and never offensive, even if not in every instance entirely satisfying, from our own point of view. No exception can justly be taken to the playing of Mr. Daly. His Larry Doyle is a refreshingly simple characterization, conceived and carried out in a vein of naturalness, and highly suggestive of the Irish racial charm. His brogue is of the best. Mr. Mitchell's Broadbent is generally excellent, but in some respects leaves us in doubt, while Mr. Farren's Peter Keegan is as convincing and sincere a little study as our stage has seen for years. Of the others Mr. Price, as Father Dempsey, and Mr. Tyler, as Hodgson, are most to be commended.

THIS WEEK'S ATTRACTIONS.

E. H. SOTHERN and Julia Marlowe will begin their second Shakespearean season in New York at the Knickerbocker Theatre tomorrow night. Owing to the length of the performance, the overture will begin at 7:45 and the curtain will rise promptly at 8. Charles Frohman, who has a three years' contract with the two stars, during which time they are to appear in special Shakespearean productions, will then present them in "The Taming of the Shrew." This will be Mr. Sothern's first time in New York in the character of Petruchio, and it will also be Miss Marlowe's first time as Katherine. They will have the support of the strongest dramatic organization that Mr. Frohman could secure, and there will be with them on the stage at times as many as 100 people. The version employed will be Mr. Sothern's own, in which he differs considerably from the well-known Booth and Daly versions.

To-morrow evening, at the Belasco Theatre, Mrs. Leslie Carter will be seen in "Du Barry"—the third revival of her present brief engagement in the city, and one of her greatest successes. Her reappearance in this rôle will doubtless be the event of an enthusiastic welcome such as greeted her return to the rôle of Zaza last week.

The company now with Mrs. Carter will support her in "Du Barry," while the original production will be used in the mounting.

Among the members of the company who will be in the cast are W. H. Compton, William Harris, Frederick Lewis, T. L. Coleman, Pedro De Cordoba, Fred Eric, Frank Reicher. Frank Kingdon, Malcolm Bradley, Edson R. Miles, Rowland Buckstone, Alice Harrington, Millicent McLaughlin, and Mrs. Woodward.

Joseph Cawthorn, the German dialect comedian, who has been a great favorite with the theatre-going public for several years, has at last attained to the dignity of a star in the theatrical firmament, and will make his first appearance in this capacity at the Herald Square Theatre tomorrow evening in the rôle of Fritz von Swobenfritz in Klaw & Erlanger's production of John J. McNally's latest musical comedy, "Fritz in Tammany Hall." Mr. Cawthorn's last appearance in New York was in the title rôle in "Mother Goose," and four years ago as Lena, the nurse, in "The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast," at the Broadway Theatre, he attracted a good deal of attention.

The new play, as its title indicates, has a political coloring. The story deals with a varied selection of east side types which are well drawn and contrasted. The story of the piece is related in three acts, with scenes which represent Cooper Union and the square at the junction of Third and Fourth Avenues, the picnic ground at Donnelly's Grove, Long Island, and the ballroom of Tammany Hall. Fritz is a very popular east-side baker who has dabbled a little in politics in drumming up the German vote. In order to split the district vote, Pat McCann, the district leader, has Fritz nominated for Alderman, and to the surprise of the machine he is elected. The adventures of Fritz in the unknown land of practical ward politics form in great part the comic interest of the play.

+ + +

"The Romance of a Hindoo Princess," a dramatic spectacle in two scenes by Frederic Thompson, will succeed "The Raiders" at the Hippodrome next Wednesday night as expected. In gorgeous costume and scenic effects the managers of the great playhouse declare the stage has never produced the equal of the piece, while its action teems with human and animal vivid novelty. Twenty-four elephants will co-operate with the Hippodrome's hundred horses in the culminating climax of the production. The Barlow, Powers, Lockhardt, and Thompson & Dundy herds will all be utilized in a battle which terminates in their flight up a wild mountainside, pursuit by an army of men afoot and ashore, and final desperate plunge into an East Indian lake, into which the tank has been converted. Nearly 500 persons will have part in the show

Claire Holiot and her lions will be the sensational feature in the circus and specialty department of the Hippodrome entertainment. With her first American appearance comes the début of Miss Marquis, whose six trained horses have made her famous abroad.

"A Yankee Circus on Mars," with its beautiful "Dance of the Hours," will continue its run.

+ + +

A distinct novelty is promised in "The Truth Tellers," a new comedy by Martha Morton, which will have its first presentation in New York at the Grand Opera House to-morrow night under the management of Fred G. Berger, with Maude Fealy in the leading rôle.

The novelty of the offering lies in the fact that the interest and dramatic action is said to centre almost entirely around five children, ranging in age from 5 to 16. The children have been taught that they must speak the truth, and their strict regard for veracity leads to amusing consequences when they are brought face to face with worldly people.

Maude Fealy has been engaged to play the principal part of Ernestine. In the cast in support of Miss Fealy are Orme Caldara, Alfred Hudson, John Denton, Sidney Carlisle, and Esther Lyons.

+ + +

Tuesday afternoon Jerome K. Jeroms, the author and humorist, will give a lecture on the stage of the Empire Theatre. The lecture will comprise selections from Mr. Jerome's own books, and incidentally he will tell many of his own experiences, which without doubt will prove most entertaining.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

Henry E. Dixey, assisted by Carlotta Nillson and an excellent company, is making "The Man on the Box" at the Madison Square a much-talked-of play.

"Man and Superman," with Robert Loraine, continues to be one of the biggest hits of the season. There has been capacity at every performance.

Maxine Elliott enters upon the seventh week of her successful season at the Criterion in Clyde Fitch's comedy, "Her Great Match."

"The Prince Chap" announces its fiftieth performance to-morrow night, when souvenir postcards will be distributed to commemorate the event.

"The Virginian" begins its second week at the Academy of Music to-morrow night. Dustin Farnum is with the production.

David Warfield in "The Music Master" continues to play to the capacity of the Bijou. It is not likely that there will be any other production at that playhouse this season.

James K. Hackett and Mary Mannering have found success in their co-star venture and are playing to fine houses in "The Wails of Jericho" at the Savoy.

John Drew in "De Lancey," now playing at the Empire, begins the seventh week of his prosperous engagement at that theatre.

This is Chauncey Olcott's last week at the Majestic, where he is playing in his new play, "Edmund Burke."

At Wallack's Thomas Jefferson begins his second and last week in the revival of "Rip Van Winkle."

Arnold Daly, in Bernard Shaw's new play, "John Bull's Other Island," continues at the Garrick, where the second week begins to-morrow night.

"Just Out of College," with Joseph Wheelock, Jr., is to remain at the Lyceum for some time. There are many amusing types in the piece.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

The two hundredth local performance of "It Happened in NordlaTnd" will be celebrated at the Lew Fields Theatre to-morrow night. The burlesque of "The Music Master" is played in conjunction with the musical comedy.

De Wolf Hopper in "Happyland" has made a decided hit at the Lyric, and will remain at that theatre indefinitely. The piece is beautifully put on, and the music is effective.

"The Rogers Brothers in Ireland," in which the Rogers brothers are now playing at the Liberty, enters on its last two weeks to-morrow night.

To-morrow evening Lulu Glaser and her company in "Miss Dolly Dollars" will move to the New Amsterdam for a brief run. The musical comedy has proved profitable for Miss Glaser.

Klaw & Erlanger's big spectacle, "The Pearl and the Pumpkin," has but two weeks more to remain at the Broadway. The attraction is replete with effective stage pictures.

There is no abatement shown in the interest taken in Edna May and "The Catch of the Season" at Daly's. The musical comedy makes an appeal to playgoers who enjoy a dainty performance.

McIntyre and Heath continue to draw capacity audiences at the New York, where they are playing in their new vehicle, "The Ham Tree."

"Frühlingsluft," with Lina Abarbanell, is still the attraction at the Irving Place Theatre, where the comic opera has swung into favor.

WITH THE STOCK COMPANIES.

So successful was the revival the week before last of "One of Our Girls," that F. F. Proctor has selected another Bronson Howard play, "The Banker's Daughter," for his all-star company's vehicle at the Fifth Avenue Theatre next week. Charles Richman will appear at every performance as John Strebelow, and Amelia Bingham will share honors with Isabelle Evesson in the part of the frisky widow, Florence St. Vincent Brown. Miss Evesson appearing at the Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday matinées, and Miss Bingham at the Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday matinées and at all the night performances. Frances Starr will play the ingenue character of Lillian Strebelow, J. H. Gilmour will be the Harold Routledge, and Robert Cummings the Count de Carojac. Charles Abbe has the character of George Washington Phipps, and the other members of the company who participate in the revival are Harold Hartsell, Gerald Griffin, Julia Blanc, Ethel Conroy, George Howell, Dudley Hawley, and the Messrs. Hess and Thompson.

The return, by popular request, to the daily matinée system has been liberally rewarded, and to show his appreciation, Mr. Proctor announces a Bingham souvenir matinée for Monday, an Evesson souvenir matinée for Tuesday, and a Richman souvenir matinée for Thursday.

+ + +

"The Sign of the Four," a sensational melodramatic production founded on the book of the same name, will be the attraction at the Yorkville Theatre this week, with Eugene Moore and Mabel Montgomery in the leading rôles. There will be matinées daily, except Monday, and on Tuesday souvenirs will be distributed.

+ + +

"The Still Alarm," Joseph Arthur's melodrama, will be revived at Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Theatre this week. In the cast are William J. Kelley, Beatrice Morgan, Paul McAllister, Agnes Scott, James Wilson, Mathilde Deshon, and Sol Aiken.

COMBINATION HOUSES.

Mary Marble comes to the Fourteenth Street Theatre to-morrow evening in a revival of "Nancy Brown," the musical comedy in which Marie Cahill recently starred. The original Broadway production is to be used, and Miss Marble is said to have an able support.

+ + +

"My Tomboy Girl," with Lottie Williams in the title rôle, is the offering at the American for the week. The melodrama last year was most successful when it played in the city, and this engagement at the American will doubtless be profitable.

+ + +

Eva Tanguay in "The Sambo Girl" begins a brief engagement at the West End to-morrow evening. Miss Tanguay is said to have a congenial rôle, and has been supplied by a good company and adequate setting.

+ + +

"Marching Through Georgia," the new military melodrama, which recently was produced at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, will be the offering at the Metropolis for the week. The play is founded on Sherman's march to the sea.

+ + +

Raymond Hitchcock returns to the city this week at the Harlem Opera House in "Easy Dawson," the comedy in which he was recently seen at Wallack's. The supporting company is the same as when last seen here.

+ + +

At the Murray Hill this week, "The Curse of Drink" is the attraction. The play has been seen at a number of New York theatres and was well received.

+ + +

"Fighting Fate," a new spectacular production, comes to the Third Avenue to-morrow night. A giant derrick swinging out over the audience, a wireless telegraph station, and a scene in lower New York are some of the surprises.

+ + +

"Queen of the Highbinders," a new four-act melodrama, will have its first presentation in the city at the New Star to-morrow night.

VAUDEVILLE.

Oscar Hammerstein announces a novel foreign feature at the head of his Victoria bill for the ensuing week. This is Fred Karno's original London Comedy Pantomime Company of fourteen players in an original one-act farce, "The Mumming Birds," or "A Night in an English Music Hall." When the curtain rises a stage within a stage is shown, the action taking place in the mimic theatre, much of the fun being contributed by the spectators in the miniature private boxes. Other acts on the bill are the Empire City Quartet, Marshall P. Wilder, Ed. Raynard, novelty ventriloquist; the Mason-Keller Company in a sketch, Pat Rooney and Marion Bent in a singing and dancing specialty, Keno, Welch and Melrose, comedy acrobats, Mlle. Celeste, Parisian juggler, and for the first time in this country, Alexander Leo Nino, violin virtuoso. There are Sunday concerts at the Victoria, matinée and evening.

+ + +

Ephraim Thompson's Troupe of Trained Elephants is the top liner this week at the Colonial. Another big feature of the new bill at this theatre will be the first uptown appearance of the Spanish danseuse, Carmencita, assisted by Mlle. Aurora. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in their George Beane sketch, "The Yellow Dragon"; Edward Blondell and company in a new skit, "The Lost Boy"; Frank Bush, with new and old stories; the Musical Avelles, xylophonists; the Brothers Lloyd, in a sensational double bounding rope act; Ollie Young and Brother, trick hoop rollers; Miss Ila Grannan, singing comedienne, and new vitagraph pictures are other attractions of the programme.

+ + +

Lillian Russell will be seen in an entirely new singing specialty at Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre this week, and will appear in some of her new gowns. As the extra attraction during this week Mr. Proctor has succeeded in securing Edwin Stevens, the celebrated monologist, and late feature of "The Pearl and the Pumpkin." The balance of the bill will be composed of such well-known talent as Watson, Hutchings and Edwards, in "The Vaudeville Exchange"; Charles F. Semon, "The Narrow Fellow"; Gillett's Dog Circus, a very excellent animal act; Searle and Violet Allen and company, in "The New Reporter"; Cooper and Robinson, colored entertainers; Rawson and June, expert boomerang throwers; Hathaway and Walton, singing and dancing act, and a very comical set of motion pictures.

+ + +

Heading Keith's bill this week are the Agoust Family, celebrated European jugglers and acrobats, who have not visited this country for several years. Reichen's troupe of acrobatic canines is also an important act on the bill. Others are Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne in "Town Hall To-night," Murphy and Nichols in "From Zaza to Uncle Tom," the Village Choir, Flying Rathbuns, Coakley and McBride, Ed C. Rice, Kenyon and De Garmo, Althea Twins, Robin Heath, Kilmer Daly, and Al Coleman.

+ + +

James T. Powers, with a company of six, appears at the Alhambra this week as the star attraction. The vehicle will be a skit satirizing current vaudeville. Other names on the programme include Mayme Remington and Buster Brownies, Chris Bruno and Mabel Russell in their specialty, "Tricks of the Trade"; Sidney Grant with new yarns, Foster and Foster, comedians; La Mas Anders, the mysterious duo, and the Three Yoscarys, Italian comedy acrobats. New vitagraph pictures will conclude each bill.

+ + +

The Zanigs head the programme at Hurtig & Seamon's this week. They will give an exhibition of telepathy that is said to be remarkable. Other features are Byers and Herman, in a pantomime act; Edwin Keough and company, who will present the comedy skit "A Vaudeville Surprise"; the Heras family, European acrobats; Ward and Curran in a new edition of "The Terrible Judge," "Carlin and Otto, real German comedians; the Levinos in a comedy sketch, "Hypnotizing a Wife"; Maddox and Melvin in a skit, "At the Station"; Nanon Jacques, singing comedienne, and an entirely new set of movable pictures by the Kinetograph.

+ + +

Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon will be the stars on the bill at Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre this week, appearing in their delightful one-act comedy "A String of Pearls." Another feature will be Kitty Barry, who recently was with "Fortuna." James F. Dolan and Ida Lenhart, Delmore and Lee, Lew Hawkins, Cole's Pantomime Dogs, Mills and Morris, Transatlantic Four, and Kennedy and Quatrill complete the list of attractions.

+ + +

"The Dainty Duchess" is booked for the Circle this week. Five or six big specialties are introduced in the piece, and the management promises an excellent performance.

+ + +

The finish of the motor race for the Vanderbilt Cup and the series of auto races and the races preceding will be shown on the cinematograph at the Eden Musée this afternoon and evening in addition to the World in Wax and the Hungarian Orchestra.

+ + +

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Money market conditions maintained their ascendency last week over stock market operations to a rather marked degree, and it was upon the developments in the money position at home and abroad that financial interest focused. There were other happenings of more or less importance during the week, but, inasmuch as they represented the fulfillment of earlier promises, their influence was not so direct as was the force of the shifting money currents. Thus the publication of the Government's crop report covering conditions near the close of the month of September largely confirmed previous forecasts. In the case of the corn yield the figures of the report proved that it is to measure up to the expectations of a record crop—some 2,700,000,000 bushels. While the deterioration in the condition of Spring wheat during the harvesting period made necessary a readjustment of earlier estimates of the total wheat yield, but this still promises to be, with its 683,000,000-bushel total, second only to the 748,000,000-bushel crop of 1901. The announcement of an issue of Great Northern shares under conditions most favorable to the road's stockholders marked the fruition of a plan long known to have been under advisement, which, to those familiar with Wall Street ways, explains the subsequent recessions in the price of the present shares. It is not certain, however, that there is not to come additional financing from this quarter, unless the prevalent belief that a favorable disposition of the Great Northern's ore lands is planned is unfounded. Similarly as regards the dividend increases of the week, it has long been known that the earnings of the Pacific Coast Company presented opportunity for an enlarged distribution to shareholders, and this has also been true, perhaps in smaller degree, in the case of the United States Cast Iron Pipe and Foundry Company, which is doubtless participating in the prosperity attending the iron and steel business. These developments, each in its way, constitute tangible evidence of the soundness of underlying conditions in agriculture, commerce, and trade, and their passive reception in Wall Street proves nothing more than a general recognition of the presence of this fundamental strength in the country's position. The solidity of the investment structure is unquestioned, and it is this fact itself which promotes such intimate study of the speculative position just at the time when, buttressed by real values, the only point open to question is the money supply.

Predictions of a money rate ranging between 5 and 7 per cent. over a somewhat extended period were reinforced by the course of money during the week. The bulk of the loans made on the Stock Exchange went at a rate well above 5 per cent. This rate was established and maintained in spite of the operations here of out-of-town lending institutions and of the very much diminished demands made upon this centre by interior banks. The relaxation of the interior demand was a factor which enabled the banks here to report surplus reserves of $10,211,400, an increase of $5,925,225 as compared with this item in the previous statement, although receipts of gold and the operations of non-Clearing House lenders were also of assistance. There were no unusual demands on the money supply during the week, unless a part of the financing of the final payment of some $30,000,000 on the Japanese bond subscriptions, which fall due to-morrow, was arranged. This week the bank position will be unaffected by new receipts of gold, for no engagements were made last week owing to the rise in demand sterling. The advance in sterling has amounted to some 55 points, and at the week-end quotation of 4.8575 further imports of gold at the moment seem precluded. One of the factors, and perhaps the most potent, in preventing free and profitable gold engagements, the meagreness of cotton shipments, is also responsible for the belief in banking circles that the period of firm money rates will be protracted. The Southern demand for currency for crop-moving purposes has been delayed by the lateness of the crop in many sections, and persistence in an eleven-cent minimum price for the product will tend both to retain money at the South for the purpose of carrying this cotton and to retard shipments, for English spinners have shown themselves unwilling to pay the prevailing prices for the raw material, and their indisposition to do so may be supported by the presence in England of a larger supply of cotton than is generally suspected. The decrease of $11,000,000 in cotton shipments during September disclosed by the Government's trade report on Friday last reveals one explanation of the adverse movement of foreign exchange. Another explanation has been, of course, the advance in discount rates at all important European centres. Official discount rates were undisturbed by the English or German banks, but sharp curtailment in loans was necessary in each case to maintain or add to surplus reserves. The present outlook is that there will be abroad no relaxation of the vigilant supervision exercised over the money market until the pending Russian loan is well out of the way.

A direct influence on the market of the week was Mr. Vanderlip's Washington address, although its reception by the speculative community was obviously overdone. After giving just weight to the manifold evidences of wide prosperity throughout this country he ventured to point out a fact which has been patent to all but those imbued with the speculative fever—namely, that the enormous demands on funds involved in a greater volume of business than has ever been known in our trade annals left no room for extended speculation in the stock market, coming as they did with the harvest requirements at unprecedented figures. Absurd deductions were at once made from this simple statement of fact, so absurd that ground is found for the belief that some such movement as that deprecated by Mr. Vanderlip was nipped in the bud. But all this does not impair the real value attaching to such a sane and timely exposition of the real situation.

Told 'Round the Ticker.

F. AUGUSTUS HEINZE has moved himself and the offices of his United Copper Company into the same building with the Amalgamated Copper Company at 42 Broadway. Henceforth it should be no uncommon thing for him to elbow his enemies, even Mr. H. H. Rogers, in the fashion of a fellow-tenant, meeting them perchance in the corridor or perhaps in the elevator. Like a great many other men whom Wall Street reads a great deal about and discusses fluently, Mr. Heinze is known by sight to very few persons in the financial community. He has a strong, aggressive personality, but there is nothing about his general appearance to mark him out among men.

SENATOR BAILEY of Texas is one man prominent in public life who cannot pass through Wall Street, as he did last week, without attracting attention. People may not know him as the Senator from Texas, but they stop to look at him and to ask who he is. His appearance is sufficiently unconventional to make him conspicuous in the throng. It is partly his style of dress and partly his stature and bearing. Other public men, whose faces are much more familiar to newspaper and periodical readers, pass unnoticed because they are like other men in general respects and are lost in Wall Street's stream of humanity. President Roosevelt might come to Wall Street unheralded and walk through the length and breadth of it and not one man in a hundred would turn to look at him.

JAMES W. SCULLY and Charles A. Painter, the latter a member of the New York Stock Exchange, leave the firm of Henry Sproul & Co. to-morrow to join Daniel Beech, cashier of a Pittsburg bank, in the new firm of Scully, Painter & Beech. Henry Sproul will continue in Henry Sproul & Co., at 410 Wood Street, Pittsburg, and 74 Broadway, New York.

THOMAS DENNY, Jr., member of the Stock Exchange and of the firm of T. Denny & Co., 30 Pine Street, has been on a hunting trip in Maine. He is expected to return to New York to-morrow.

GRANT B. SCHLEY, back from the inspection tour with James J. Hill over the Great Northern and Northern Pacific, says he was profoundly impressed by the good feeling with which the West meets Mr. Hill's efforts to develop its resources. Incidentally, Mr. Schley took notice of some of his own interests, among which are two mining companies in British Columbia, and the Tintic Company, near Salt Lake City, not to mention several Northwestern railroads.

WILLIAM M. IVINS, the Republican nominee for Mayor, has a brother operating in the curb market. He is Edward W. Ivins, and they do say that wherever the fight is thickest in Broad Street, there Ivins is to be found. Maybe he will boom the stock of the Republican candidate.

AUGUST BELMONT'S stay in the General Memorial Hospital is enlivened by the frequent arrivals of large bouquets of flowers and by visitations from his friends. A multi-millionaire's hospital cot is as near a bed of roses as attention can make it. Mr. Belmont, who is now passing his time in a room overlooking Central Park, expects to be out in a few days.

RUSSIAN BANK IN FAR EAST.

Business of the Russo-Chinese Bank, Its Local Manager States, Has Not Suffered as Result of War.

The affairs of the Russo-Chinese Bank, which played an important part in Russia's plans in the Far East, have been the subject of some discussion in the foreign press. In a recent issue of The Financial Times of London appeared a review of the bank's position as affected by the results of the Russo-Japanese war. The point was made that in all likelihood the bank's activity in the Far East, which is its most profitable field of operation, would of necessity be much curtailed. Interests identified with the Russo-Chinese Bank differ radicaly with this view.

The current year, it is stated, is proving a very profitable one for the bank and its business is said to be increasing instead of decreasing. Walter Kutzleb, New York representative of the bank, made the following statement concerning the business recently done by the bank:

"The first six months of 1905 proved a record period in the bank's history not only in the matter of turn-over but in profits as well. The business of the bank in the Far East has been steadily developing instead of falling off. The deposits held by the bank in the Far East show a large increase for this period over the corresponding period in 1904. I refer particularly to individual deposits representing the business done by the bank with general business interests. This showing is of course more significant than any increase in the bank's business with the Government. The fact that the individual deposits in the Far East have increased indicates clearly that the bank's relations with business interests have not suffered as a result of the recent war. Moreover, the business being done by the New York office of the bank is steadily increasing. The financing of American exports to China, particularly cotton piece goods, through our New York office, has more than doubled during the past year."

COTTON CROP REPORTS

How They Are Now Received in the South.

OCTOBER'S FIGURES ACCEPTED

But Not Estimates Based on Them—The Association's Bulletins and Crop Money Demand.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 10.—Judging from the tone of the Southern press, and from comments that I have heard made by planters of Mississippi, I should say that the late Government report, giving an average cotton condition of 71.2 has been generally accepted by the South as fairly accurate. It is not held to be an index to conditions in Mississippi, or in Louisiana, where a backward season and heavy rains, the epidemic and its vexatious quarantines, to say nothing of a growing shortage of labor, have played havoc with the farmers' prospects, but for the cotton belt as a whole, it is regarded as representing, at least as correctly as percentage figures can, the probable actual condition. Less credence is given to the crop estimates that have been based on this percentage, for the farmer knows well how much guesswork there is behind these, and how much ignorance of real conditions in the field. He knows, as the shrewd calculators cannot know, that even at this date fully a third of the crop yet standing would be wholly lost should the early frost foretold by weather prophets fall upon it.

The one criticism that I have heard on the Census Bureau report is a sound one, to wit, that its practical value is impaired through its failure to give comparisons with the report of corresponding date of last year. This report shows that 2,358,031 bales of this season's crop had been ginned at the cotton gins of the South up to Sept. 25.

THE GINNING REPORT.

Now I have noted that the Census Bureau reports are accepted throughout the South as having the authoritative value of statistics, and this has somewhat surprised me as, through my acquaintance with the farmers here, I have come to learn that they cannot be wholly accurate. I give a conversation had with a farmer, which shows where the element of error may creep in.

"You see," he said, "an enormous proportion of the small gins at the South are owned and operated by negroes. Now, some of these fellows are reasonably intelligent, having some knowledge of reading, writing, and accounts, but others are densely ignorant, and are able to carry on their business solely through the familiarity which they have acquired with the mechanical part of it. They know what the fee for ginning a bale is, and can count it when received, but should a customer bring in two loads at once for ginning he can easily cheat the darky out of all his profit in estimating the amount due.

"The census bureau sends to each ginner a blank, on which he is requested to specify how many bales he has ginned during the season, how many he has ginned since the last report, and how many more he expects to gin before the season closes. Now, the negro ginner receiving this blank is perhaps quite unable to read or write, but to be able to handle his report he has learned to transcribe the numerals 500. In reply to each of the questions on the paper, therefore, in the blank preceding the word "Bales" he writes 500. You look as though you did not believe me, but I have actually seen a report made out that way, and knew that each month during the ginning season it was sent in thus to the bureau. It is quite within the bounds of possibility that the bureau receives scores of similar imperfect reports every year."

"How do you suppose they are recorded?" I said.

"I am sure I do not know," was the reply. "Perhaps the ginner is credited with 1,500 bales each time, perhaps with only 500 bales—the latter is more probable. But it must not be forgotten that this estimate of 500 bales ginned or to be ginned bears no relation whatever to the number that the ginner has actually handled. Of this he is unable to keep any exact record.

"That is one source of error," the speaker went on; "another was admitted by Director North himself last Fall, when he was asked whether he was able to get reports each month from every gin, and what record he made when a report was not received. His reply was that the failure of reports was frequent, but that in such case the gin was credited for the month with the number of bales shown on the last previous report received."

"And yet you have said," I remarked "that you regarded the Census Bureau's reports as of the highest value to the South, and its system of collecting statistics as the best that had ever been devised."

"True," was the reply, "and I hold to both statements. The sources of error that I have noted, if indefinitely multiplied, would surely destroy the value of the record. But they are exceptional, and the overestimate which they may seem to warrant is counteracted by the instances in which, through stupidity or perverseness, a ginner never sends in a record at all, and by the fact that there are, no doubt, always some small out-of-the-way gins that never get on the Census Bureau's list, and never receive report blanks. Wherefore, taking the case as a whole, the bureau's method is a good one, and its report the most accurate we have ever yet been able to secure."

COTTON ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

The impression is current at the North that the Southern farmers systematically and with malice aforethought underestimate their cotton crops to keep up the price and that they desire to oppose or thwart all efforts made to acquaint the public with the actual size of the crop. But I regard this impression as erroneous, and the support which farmers have given the Southern Cotton Association in its efforts to secure accurate reports seems to prove that I am right. The farmer wants the truth, and he recognizes, as no other can, the difficulty of securing it concerning a crop yet unharvested.

I have before me as I write the first bulletin issued by the Mississippi Cotton Association on the crop conditions of the season. This bears date Sept. 30, and later weekly issues will declare actual conditions until the close of the cotton harvest. The reason for its appearance is thus stated:

"Those interested in crop conditions demand information concerning growing crops. The Government report comes out monthly, and until the hour of issue is secret. This is not as it should be, and gives to the few who are best able to secure early advices concerning it the advantage over the farmers. This bulletin will be issued weekly and speaks from the card—the men in the field."

The information included in the individual reports from counties, which constitute the matter of the bulletin, covers not only the general cotton condition, but that of other crops, also climatic condition and remarks concerning weather, labor, and the progress of the harvest. The general cotton condition for the entire State is given at 65, the condition of other crops at 75. Mississippi is one of the first of the Cotton Association States to attempt the preparation and publication of these reports, but other States will doubtless follow the example.

MOVING THE CROPS.

I asked a Southern planter the other day how much money he thought the South would need to move this year's cotton crop.

"Money from where?" he answered tartly.

"From the East," I said; "from the great money centres. You have not called for any yet, I am told."

"We have not," exploded the other, "and we do not intend to. Last year we moved 75 per cent. of our great crop with our own funds. This year we will move it all, and no thanks to moneylenders."

"Do you regard the State of Mississippi as in a prosperous condition now?" I asked, "in spite of epidemics, quarantines, and bad weather?"

"Financially, it is," was the reply. "There are no banks at the North in a better shape than the banks of this State, though the capital stock of the former may be much greater than that of the latter. Furthermore, our people, in towns and country, have not been since the war so free from debt as they are to-day. From this time on I am convinced that the South will be able to finance everything and every one within her borders, and will ask no aid of any other section in bearing her burdens."

RUSSIAN BONDS IN NEW YORK.

Little Interest Taken in Issue Already Introduced in This Market—Investments in Foreign Securities Governed Largely by Policy.

The invitation extended to New York bankers to participate in a loan conference in St. Petersburg and the departure of George W. Perkins of J. P. Morgan & Co. in response to this invitation serves to raise the question of this market's attitude toward a Russian bond flotation. It is somewhat curious that the probability of New York's sharing in the forthcoming issue of bonds by Russia should increase at a time when money rates are giving some concern to our own speculators if not to our investors.

The opinion has been expressed this past week that the only chance of a large number of Russian bonds being taken in this market lay in the direction of subscriptions by the large investing institutions, including the life insurance companies. Apart from the fact that recent developments in the insurance world might lessen the inclination of the big companies to go heavily into a Russian bond syndicate, there exists the possibility that subscriptions would come only from investors, wether individual or corporate, which might be governed in the matter by considerations of policy. The blocks of European Government securities held by American insurance companies have generally been regarded as means to an end, the end being the favor of the Government whose securities were purchased.

If the past record of Russian securities, and, for the matter of that, other European securities as well, so far as this market is concerned, were to be repeated in the case of another Russian flotation in this market, it is unlikely that any general investment interest would be taken in such an issue. The Russian bonds which some years ago were listed on the New York Stock Exchange have never once been dealt in on the Exchange. The sole result apparently of the listing of these bonds was the passing of amenities between the Russian Government and the authorities of the Stock Exchange, including the presentation of a Sèvres vase by the Czar.

It is true, of course, that the recent flotations of Japanese bonds have further familiarized American investors with the securities of foreign Governments, and the chances of a Russian loan succeeding are probably greater now than at any time in the past. It is at least a safe assumption that if New York bankers undertake to offer Russian bonds in this market they will, in advance of the offering, assure themselves of the success of the undertaking.

INTERIOR BALANCES ON CALL.

The lending of call money upon the Stock Exchange here on Monday last, which was one of the causes of the decline of from 2 to 3 per cent. in call rates, was an incident often paralleled when money rates work as high as they did at that time, per cent. The balances of interior institutions receive 2 per cent. on the average at local banks, which makes the higher rates occasionally touched on the Stock Exchange tempting.

At this time of the year interior balances here are small, and in many cases altogether depleted, but when high rates are offered for funds whatever balances there are are put out in collateral loans, the 2 per cent. paid by local banks looking insignificant beside the 6 or 8 per cent. willingly paid by brokers. The interior banks forget that their local correspondents have perhaps paid them 2 per cent. for months on end when money rates on stock ruled at 1 or 1½ per cent. Such loans help to make a favorable bank statement, but brokers are not overanxious to take interior money, owing to the chance of its being recalled quickly to meet some home demand. Local banks appeal to them as more considerate in the matter of calling loans.

JAPAN AND THE UNITED STATES.

Japan's condition after her war with Russia, as described by former Minister Okuma, may be compared with profit with the condition of the United States after the civil war.

The debt of Japan is $1,250,000,000; that of the United States was $2,674,000,000. The population of Japan is 47,812,000; that of the United States in 1865 was 34,748,000. The per capita debt of Japan is about $25; that of the United States in 1865 was $74. Japan's interest charge is $75,000,000, or $1.37 per capita, while in 1865 that of the United States was $3.96. Japan's per capita taxation is $6, while the net ordinary receipts of the United States in 1865, per capita, were $9.

Thus in every one of these particulars Japan is better off than the United States was after the civil war. This comparison, however, takes no account of the enormous difference in area and material resources of the two countries. Japan in 1905 is not equal to the United States in 1865. But it is fair to conclude that a measure of the great expansion and prosperity that came to the United States after the civil war will now be the lot of Japan.—Wall Street Journal.

Great Northern's Stock Increase—Ability of Road to Pay Present Rate Without Increase in Earnings.

The annual report of the Great Northern Railway Company, made public a day or two after the announcement of the intention of the Directors to increase the company's stock by $25,000,000, made very clear the ability of the road to provide for the new stock in the matter of dividends, even though the expenditure of the proceeds of the new stock added not a penny to the income derived from the property. The policy of the Great Northern in issuing stock for improvements instead of bonds naturally commends itself. The soundness of the policy is proved by the argument that stock never drove a company into bankruptcy, while bonds have done so very often. In the case of the Great Northern, however, the argument appears now to possess only academic interest. It would take something more than business depression to wipe out the net earnings of the Great Northern.

The new stock of the Great Northern at the rate paid on the present stock will call for an additional outlay of $1,750,000. Assuming the earnings of the road to show no increase, its profits would be sufficient to pay the 7 per cent. dividend on the increased stock, and to have left for other purposes more than $6,000,000. This would permit of the appropriation of the $3,000,000 for improvements, which the road set aside out of last year's earnings, and leave as much to be added to the general surplus of the property.

The showing is one of remarkable strength. As an isolated case it is interesting. It is more interesting, however, as a type of what is being accomplished on some of the most conservatively managed railroads of the country.

The publication during the last month of the annual reports of many railroad companies makes it possible to set forth the earnings of some of these with special reference to the amount of earnings applicable to common stock dividends. The showing in the case of Great Northern, of course, is on the preferred stock, which, however, is preferred only in name since it is the only class of stock outstanding. The following table shows the results for the last year on a number of roads located in various sections of the country:

The earnings available for dividends on the common stocks represent the amount of income left after providing for all fixed charges and for preferred stock dividends. Included in the amounts named as applicable to common stock dividends are the appropriations for betterments and improvements made out of the year's earnings. Expenditures for betterments charged directly to operating expenses are, of course, not regarded as part of the surplus income.

The percentages naturally vary greatly. There are, however, a sufficient number of roads in the list that are paying liberal dividends, and yet earning twice the amount they are distributing, to make the list an encouraging one to investors. A favorable feature of the showing is that, with the exception of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, which suffered exceptional losses on account of floods, and the Erie, every one of the roads showed a larger sum earned than during the previous year.

It is interesting to note that the roads showing the largest percentage earned on their common stocks are found in the Northwest. Great Northern; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, and Chicago and Northwest are conspicuous in this respect. In the East the best showing is made by Lehigh Valley, which of late has profited remarkably by the excellent management it has enjoyed. The showing of the other coal roads in the list, with the exception of Erie, is good, but Reading, the next largest earner, falls below 10 per cent., while Lehigh Valley shows 15 per cent earned on its common stock.

The Southwestern roads as a group are in marked contrast with the Northwestern roads. Atchison, which earned 9.4 per cent on its common stock in 1904, earned only 5.9 per cent last year. Denver and Rio Grande showa 1.7 per cent for its common stock, and Missouri, Kansas and Texas 1.1 per cent.

As a whole, the showing indicates clearly the ability of the roads that are paying dividends to maintain them at present rates, and even to increase them. It shows also, however, that the progress of the non-dividend-paying stocks in the matter of earnings applicable to dividends is relatively slow.

Mexican Banking Development.

The development of banking in Mexico is shown by the fact that during the six months ended June 30 the combined capital of the chartered banks of the republic increased from $103,600,000 to $127,356,844. Following are some increases voted: Banco Central Mexicano, $11,000,000; Banco de Londres y Mexico, $6,500,000; Banco de Tabasco, $100,000; Banco de Tamaulipaa, $100,620; Banco Commercial Refaccionario de Chihuahua, $50,000; Banco Nacionale de Mexico, $27,027; total, $17,356,844.

BORROWING GOLD RESERVE.

Recent Reports Recall the Loan of $25,000,000 to the Bank of England by the Bank of France.

The low point to which the reserve of the Bank of England fell ten days ago—a condition corrected in last Thursday's statement by a heavy reduction in loans—led to considerable discussion abroad of the possibility of the managers of the bank resorting to unusual means to strengthen the bank's gold supply. The suggestion made was that the gold reserve of the English bank might be increased by bullion secured from the Bank of France, not through the ordinary course of exchange operations, but by the borrowing of so much gold. The method suggested as a possible one for the Bank of England to adopt was the transfer to the Bank of France of a round lot of securities, whether stocks and bonds or acceptances held by the bank, and against these, as collateral, secure a loan in the shape of gold bars.

Such an operation between New York and Paris would be a relatively expensive undertaking, but owing to the proximity of London and Paris the transaction would involve practically no loss of interest, and the charges for transportation would of course be much smaller than in the case of a shipment to New York.

The transaction would not be without precedent, although only in one instance, so far as recalled by bankers here, has the Bank of England resorted to such an arrangement to protect its reserve. There is now no such crisis, and for that reason it seems unlikely that the operation will be repeated on this occasion. At the time of the Baring failure in 1891 the Bank of England was called upon to face an extraordinary situation. In order to protect its reserve, which was being depleted by the demands which resulted from the strained financial situation not only in London but in other centres as well, and in order to help to restore confidence, the Bank of England profited by the proffered aid of the Bank of France. There was sent from Paris to London $25,000,000 in gold which was deposited in the vaults of the Bank of England, the reserve of the institution being strengthened by that amount.

Later the identical $25,000,000 in gold bullion, still in the original packages, as it is recorded, was returned by the Bank of England to the Bank of France. It was not all philanthropy on the part of the latter institution, since by strengthening the position of the English bank it lessened the strain upon its own resources. It happened that the gold would better serve the purpose in London, and both banks were benefited by the loan.

HIGH BANK STOCK PRICES.

This City Holds the Record—Many Stocks Over $500 a Share.

One share of the Chemical National Bank sold at auction the other day for $4,452½. This sale, which marks a high record for bank stocks, draws attention to the dividend-bearing qualities (which, of course, make the values,) of the stocks of some prosperous banks in New York and throughout the country. The Chemical National pays dividends of 150 per cent. annually. The Fifth Avenue Bank, which pays 100 per cent. dividends a year, sold last at $4,100. The bid price for the stock of the little State Bank, a frantic "run" on which provides almost an annual sensation for Grand Street, is $1,500, and it pays a 50 per cent. annual dividend. Other banks whose shares bring over $500 each are the Importers' and Traders' (590¾,) the National Park, (534½,) the New York County National, (1,515,) the West Side, (599½,) the Liberty National, (530,) the Bank of America, (530,) the Plaza, (580,) and the First National, (740.) There are many others besides these.

New York City has no monopoly of the banks the stocks of which soar above the 500 mark. The shares of the First National Bank of Colorado Springs, for instance, sell at $650. The Riggs National of Washington pays a 20 per cent. annual dividend on a capital stock of $1,000,000, and the price asked for a share is $700. In Chicago the stock of the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank goes at 625. The sum asked for a share of the Germania Savings Bank and Trust Company, in New Orleans, is $2,000, and it pays an annual dividend of 50 per cent. The only Boston bank stock which sells for more than $500 a share is that of the Old Colony Trust Company, (800.) The bid price for a share of the First National Bank of Kansas City is $750, of the Lafayette Bank of St. Louis $800, of the Mechanics and Farmers' Bank of Albany $530, of the Marine National Bank of Buffalo $1,500, of the Union Savings Bank and Trust of Cincinnati $600. The stocks of six banks and trust companies in Pittsburg are quoted at more than $500 a share.

Dividends and prices seem to have the most illogical relation in some cases. One New York bank's annual dividend is only 12 per cent., but its stock sells at $1,700 a share, while another pays a 20 per cent. annual dividend and its stock sells at $590. Naturally, stability enters into the question, but it does not seem to explain some of the discrepancies. A certain National bank in Pittsburg pays a 34 per cent. annual dividend, a trust company of Boston pays 8 per cent.; yet the difference in price between the stock of these two institutions, both of them stable, is only $200.

LONDON STOCK VALUES.

Considerable irregularity has characterized the course of Stock Exchange values during the past month, but on the balance there has been a considerable improvement. This is scarcely surprising, considering that since the date of our last valuation peace has been concluded in the Far East. As compared with a month ago, the representative securities selected show a net appreciation of just over £21,000,000, the exact figures being as follows:

Aggregate value of 325 representative securities on Aug. 19, 1905.	£3,090,717,000
Aggregate value of 325 representative securities on Sept. 20, 1905.	3,111,778,000
Increase	£21,061,000

As might have been expected, the market for foreign Government securities has displayed especial strength, both Japanese and Russian bonds benefiting considerably by the termination of the war, while there has also been a considerable demand for South American stocks, accompanied by a revival in some of the low-priced descriptions. Only second in importance to the general advance in foreign Government securities has been the still greater appreciation, as marked by a percentage increase, in Canadian railways.—Boston Bankers' Magazine.

Car Scarcity in Bengal.

The Chamber of Commerce of Bengal has remonstrated with the Indian Railway authorities on account of the scarcity of railroad cars, saying that at least 3,000 more cars are required. The committee was informed that 2,200 new cars would be ordered.

WALL STREET SAFEGUARDS

Business Methods Not So Lax as They Seem.

DISTRUST OF STRANGERS

The City Bank Case an Isolated Instance—Bonds, Stocks, and Money In Millions Safely Handled Daily.

The surprising ease with which a clerk who was familiar with the routine of Wall Street recently exchanged a forged check at the National City Bank for $359,000 worth of collateral doubtless produced upon many minds the impression that large transactions between brokerage houses and banks are carried on somewhat loosely. A casual observation of business methods in the Stock Exchange community at close range might easily strengthen rather than weaken such an impression, for to any one who stops to consider it at all, it is marvelous that contracts involving many millions of dollars a day are made verbally amid apparent confusion on the floor of the Stock Exchange, that call loan transactions aggregating billions of dollars in the course of a year are made by telephone between banks and brokers, and that messenger boys receive and deliver securities all day long all over Wall Street, and that out of it all so few serious mistakes occur. But what appears at first sight to be an amazing laxity in the conduct of Wall Street business is something quite different. This business is done under high pressure, and, although much is conceded to the demand for rapidity, very little, in fact, is taken for granted. Everything is safeguarded as perfectly as can be.

For example, as soon as the theft of those securities from the National City Bank was discovered the news tickers in every brokerage office in Wall Street announced the fact and gave the numbers of the certificates. It would have been impossible a minute after this announcement had been made for any one to negotiate the securities, and brokers instantly realized that if the thief or thieves had not already disposed of them they had collateral on their hands which was practically worthless. Brokers are much more particular about doing business with strangers than might be supposed. It would be very difficult for a stranger to walk into a Wall Street office with a large amount of securities and sell them. If he did not come recommended, or if he could not identify himself, his securities would be rigidly scrutinized. Very few reputable houses would accept a large account backed up by actual cash if the client were entirely unknown. If there were anything the least unusual about what such a client proposed to do in the market he would probably be told that his business was not wanted.

A good many years ago several overdressed men walked into the office of Schwartz, Dupee & Co., at Chicago, a half hour or so before the opening of the stock market and said that they wanted to sell some Chicago Gas stock short. They were strangers to everybody in the office. The manager asked them how much stock they wanted to sell, and they said that they proposed to sell about 10,000 shares, and produced a great roll of currency to be used as margin. The manager said he couldn't think of accepting the account, and they were referred to a member of the firm for his decision. He refused the account, and the overdressed gentlemen went out. Naturally those who knew about it were watching Chicago Gas closely when the market opened. Shortly it began to come out on the tape in large amounts, and the price declined from around 90 to 88. It was evident that the men with cash margin had found some house to sell 10,000 shares of the stock short for them. Nothing more happened for about an hour, and then it was announced from the City Hall that the Board of Aldermen had begun a vicious attack upon the Chicago Gas Company. The bull pool in Chicago Gas stock was evidently prepared for this, and evidently also it knew that 10,000 shares of the stock had been sold short that morning. After the news came out from the City Hall the price of the stock went not an eighth lower, and before the close of the market that day it was selling at par. It went up so fast from 88 that the cash margin put up by the politicians was wiped out before the house that had taken their account could cover the stock, and the house itself had to stand the loss.

Incidents like this are numerous enough in the history of the brokerage business to make brokers exceedingly distrustful of strangers, especially if they come wanting to do something out of the routine.

RULERS AND RAILROADS.

Private Trains and Cars for Many of World's Chiefs—King Edward Buys a Ticket.

Discussion of the conditions under which President Roosevelt travels over the railroads of the country has directed attention to the solutions of the problem reached in the cases of Chief Executives of other great nations. These differ very radically.

Perhaps the most graceful solution is that reached by Mexico, which has placed at the disposal of President Diaz a complete special train for his personal use. The train consists of a combination baggage car, a compartment sleeping car, dining car, and saloon car with observation end. The Government has been lavish in fitting out this train, which in point of comfort and safety probably stands unrivaled.

The Canadian Government has just had built for the use of the Governor General a magnificent private car, the Alexandra. The car is finished throughout with St. Jago mahogany. The corner post sheathing, window sills, and signboards are solid and finished in natural wood, while the interior is completed in mahogany veneers in marquetry, with tulip and white holly. The three bedrooms are fitted with all modern appliances, even to electric fans and curling irons. The interior metal fittings are of heavy silver plate.

Even in China the Belgian syndicate which is to celebrate in November the opening of its line from Peking south to Hankow is building in France and Belgium a splendid train for the special use of the Dowager Empress. If this rather determined lady takes a fancy to it the syndicate is doubtless prepared to turn it over to her at once.

In England the conditions surrounding King Edward's traveling are very different. When the King travels he pays full first-class fare for himself and his companions just as any other first-class passenger expects to do. The railroad company provides a train of special cars, spikes all facing point switches, runs a pilot engine in front of the King's train, and generally expends more than it gets from the royal train, but in return the company often gets big revenue from local passenger receipts. In the case of the King's recent trip to Edinburgh to review the Scottish troops the North British Railway sent out sixty special trains, loaded, in two hours and a half. It might be added that the King's revenues are reckoned in millions and President Roosevelt's in thousands.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

A Favorable Bank Statement and Market Irregularity.

Surplus Reserves Largely Increased by Loan Shifting—Heavy Currency Shipment to New Orleans.

The chief characteristics of yesterday's short Stock Exchange session were dullness and firmness. Trading competed with automobile races for the speculative attention and the outcome was the lightest attendance on the floor in many weeks. The firmness was rather more marked in the fore part of the session, and was due then to the expectation of a favorable bank statement. Even this belief, however, was unable to promote business, which was in almost insignificant volume. Such activity as there was had to do with specialties, and the larger advances were made by these issues. Elsewhere, though, the list changes were unimportant. With the appearance of the bank statement, which even exceeded the most optimistic forecasts in the matter of surplus gain, there followed a selling movement of rather diminutive proportions, but in so narrow a market it was effective in chipping away the fractional gains of the first hour in many issues. Thereafter prices sagged to the close, which was irregular, with perhaps more losses than gains. London was also dull and took almost no part in this market, although quotations of American shares ranged a trifle higher. There was reported a disposition to quote discount rates subject to an advance by the Bank of England, and much discussion followed a further movement of exchange in favor of Paris, where discount rates again advanced. Just at the close of the local market there were made a number of shipments of money to New Orleans through the Sub-Treasury, aggregating some $1,250,000. While no clear explanation of the causes of this movement reached the market before the close of business, it was understood later in the day that they had reference to the run on a New Orleans savings bank, for which there was, according to dispatches, not the least justification.

The bank statement bore a close resemblance to previous returns of the Associated Banks in the matter of loan and deposit reductions. Loans were reduced some $29,456,000, and, while this may have been partly due to liquidation during the week, the major portion of the reduction probably represents further shifting of loans to trust companies and out-of-town institutions. The reported cash loss of $2,350,800 was out of line with preliminary estimates, but perhaps adjusts previous discrepancies. The loss of $33,104,100 in deposits reduced the reserve requirements to such an extent that surplus reserves were increased by $5,925,235, and now stand at $10,211,400. This makes a more favorable comparison with previous years, the item standing at $15,975,875 in 1904, $17,433,250 in 1903, and $5,608,250 in 1902. The most important financial operation of the present week comprises the payment to-morrow of some $30,000,000, representing final subscription dues on the Japanese loan.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Time money rates, 5@5¼ per cent. for sixty to ninety days and 4½ per cent. for four to six months.

Mercantile paper rates, 5 per cent. for sixty to ninety days' indorsed bills receivable and choice four to six months' single names, and 5½@6 per cent. for others.

Clearing House statement: Exchanges, $300,195,970; balances, $13,021,690. The Sub-Treasury debit balance was $332,070.

Foreign exchange was steady. Nominal rates were $4.82½ for sixty days and $4.86½ for demand. Rates for actual business were as follows: Sixty days, $4.8225; demand, $4.8575; cables, $4.8625; commercial bills, $4.81½@$4.82½.

Commercial bills were quoted: Francs, 5.20⅝ and 5.18; reichsmarks, 94 5-16 and 95 1-32; guilders, 39 13-16 and 40 plus 1-16.

Charleston—Buying, par; selling, 1-10 premium. San Francisco—Sight, par; telegraphic, 3½c. Cincinnati—20c discount. St. Louis—10c discount.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

Surplus Reserve Shows Increase Despite Loss of $2,350,800 Cash.

The loss in cash reported by the banks yesterday much exceeded Friday's estimates, amounting as it did to $2,350,800 as compared with the minimum estimated loss of $50,000. The loss in cash, however, instead of affecting the surplus reserve adversely was accompanied by an increase of $5,925,225 in that item. This showing resulted from a very heavy decrease in loans and deposits. It was considered probable that there had been some liquidation of loans during the week, but the reduction reported was much heavier than had been anticipated. Loans decreased by $29,456,600 and deposits showed a falling off of no less than $33,090,700. The surplus reserve now stands at $10,211,400 compared with a surplus of $15,957,875 at this time a year ago.

The items of last week's bank statement, the changes from the preceding week, and the statement of Oct. 15, 1904, follow:

CUTS OFF DIVIDENDS.

Alaska Packers' Association Says Overproduction Is the Cause.

After paying monthly dividends for 141 consecutive months, the Alaska Packers' Association announces them suspended. The circular received by the stockholders says that "it is now deemed prudent to forego the payment of further dividends until such time as the return to normal market conditions may again place the association in position to render to its stockholders the satisfactory returns on their investment which they have been accustomed to receive during the past twelve years."

Since the organization of the corporation in 1893 dividends amounting to $5,469,382 have been paid. Overproduction is responsible, according to the circular, for the present suspension.

Financial Notes.

The authorized capital stock of the Mexican Central Railway Company has been increased to $100,000,000.

R. A. Smith of the law firm of Osler & Hammond, Toronto, has been elected a Director of the Commercial Cable Company.

The Colonial Securities Company invites subscriptions to the $3,000,000 capital stock of the Guanajuato Amalgamated Gold Mines Company. The company operates the Negociacion de la Paz group of gold and silver mines at Guanajuato, Mexico.

The Kentucky and Ohio Burley Tobacco Growers' Company, which was incorporated late in September in Kentucky, has a capital stock of $1,500,000. The company was formed to control the white burley crop of the United States in opposition to the American Tobacco Company.

A committee composed of R. E. Wright, W. H. Smith, Jr., A. C. Bakewell, William S. Hancock, and George N. Reichard has presented a plan for the reorganization of the Inter-State Telephone Company of New Jersey. The new company which will be formed will issue these securities: $1,000,000 first mortgage 5 per cent. bonds, $4,000,000 general mortgage bonds, and $600,000 capital stock.

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

Dear Money and Dread of Dearer Money Discouraging.

Market Would Rather Have a Five Per Cent. Rate at Once—Bankers Bearing Russian Bonds.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. [Copyright, 1905.]

LONDON, Oct. 14.—Dear money, a dread of dearer money, and liquidation on French account have been the most influential factors in the Stock Exchange this week. Their effect has been to discourage investment and speculation, and largely to counteract any of the influences tending to an upward movement of prices. So long as a 5 per cent bank rate is recognized as a possibility, there can be small hope of improvement in business. The general opinion is that it would be better for the stock markets to have the 5 per cent. rate established immediately than to have it threatening the markets, for it is an axiom that a substantial boom in stocks is not apt to be stopped by a high continuation rate.

There have been few notable changes in quotations this week. Consols and most of the other gilt-edged securities are a trifle higher than last Saturday, but the largest gain has been only a quarter of a point. Home rails were also improved, but the gains by no means were commensurate with the betterment in traffic returns exhibited by most of the lines. Monetary considerations exercised a distinctly depressing influence in the foreign department. Japanese issues were the most active stocks, but the variations from last week's prices were slight. Russians were weak, and a story was circulated that Continental financiers were bearing this market in order to get better terms for the new loan they are negotiating. It is predicted that when the loan is completed, these gentlemen will turn their efforts in the other direction.

Mines have been almost uniformly dull, but their price changes have been quite insignificant.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—Money was in good demand in the market to-day, and considerable sums changed hands in connection with the repayment of over $22,500,000 of Egyptian Government bonds. Discounts were firm.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was quiet and practically featureless. Consols and Home Rails were fairly steady.

Americans opened steady and quiet pending the New York bank statement. The undertone was cheerful, and there was moderate buying, probably for New York account. Prices closed firm.

Foreigners were steady.

Kafirs were quietly irregular.

Bullion amounting to £28,000 was withdrawn from the Bank of England to-day for shipment to France, and £25,000 was withdrawn for shipment to Egypt.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 28.82; Lisbon, 4.50.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

H. V. Jones, one harvest expert who is never oversanguine in his conclusions, ends his "cropping" for this season with a final estimate of 2,521,987,000 bushels of corn, the largest crop ever raised. He says: "It is doubtful if the United States ever enjoyed as favorable a crop result as this year. All sections of the country have been favored with a harvest. No crop is a failure over any large area. Wheat, corn, oats, cotton, hay, potatoes, dairy results—all good on the whole and well distributed over the States. The fodder crops are heavy and farmers will have a supply ample to insure full cattle feeding. The Western railroads are already taxed to their capacity. While rolling stock purchases have been large for two or three years, the roads are not able to move pomptly the tonnage offering. Fully one-fifth of the Northwest grain elevator capacity is already filled by early marketings, and wheat deliveries by farmers at such points are being refused for the present. The Northwest range cattle movement will continue for thirty days at the expense of wheat, hence the maximum wheat movement in the Northwest will not be realized before November. It is not easy to overestimate the tonnage pressing upon Western trunk lines for the coming twelve months. The Burlington will make a new record of earnings. Rock Island territory is supported by heavy crops from Chicago to Colorado and into the southern districts. The Santa Fé will enjoy like prosperous conditions. The Northwestern, Illinois Central, St. Paul, Missouri Pacific, and Union Pacific will score high totals of earnings. The Great Northern, Northern Pacific, and Soo will break records."

Trading was greatly restricted yesterday owing to the absence of the large Wall Street contingent that attended the motor races. It was much the dullest Stock Exchange session of this whole dull period. The market was strong up to the appearance of the weekly bank statement. Immediately upon the publications of the week's banking results, which were favorable beyond any prediction, prices made an upward start, but profit taking in moderate volume checked any advance and caused declines all around in the last half hour of trading. Those who were waiting for a good bank statement on which to sell stocks got a better statement than they were looking for, and then found that the market was too narrow to take their stocks. The tone of the market at the close was heavy.

It is reported from Philadelphia that when it came to a question of issuing either new stock or bonds with which to finance the Lehigh Valley's purchase of the Coxe coal properties the decision in favor of a bond issue was influenced by banking interests who wanted a commission on the transaction.

A promising agitation for ship subsidies at Washington this Winter would probably be turned to some speculative advantage in International Mercantile Marine and Pacific Mail shares, especially the latter, owing to the greater ease with which the $20,000,000 of Pacific Mail capital stock can be handled in the market. There has not been an active speculation in Pacific Mail for a long time. Several months ago a Boston operator made a somewhat sensational turn in the stock, but he did it without creating any active or sustained speculation. Influenced partly by the prospect of favorable ship subsidy legislation this Winter and partly by what the company is supposed to be doing without subsidies, certain persons have recently been picking up the stock. It became active enough last week on advancing quotations to attract some general attention. For the year ended April 30 last the company showed gross earnings of $5,592,822 as compared with $3,439,112 for the preceding twelve months. The same statement showed that the company's indebtedness to the Southern Pacific Company for money advanced had been reduced from $1,326,163 to $617,122. This is the Pacific Mail Company's only floating debt. It has no bonded indebtedness.

There has recently been some activity in International Mercantile Marine shares on the curb. The preferred stock has been particularly strong. This is the only one of Mr. Morgan's creations that has not been restored to a satisfactory market position in the last eighteen months, and his following believes that it will be a matter of pride with him to do his utmost to give it a better standing. The commanding position of the United States Steel stocks at present is a source of immense satisfaction to the Morgan following both here and abroad. The preferred is selling well above the price level on which it was originally distributed, and the common stock, although it is not receiving dividends, is back to almost the level on which it was distributed by Mr. Keene.

It might be supposed from a number of surface indications that the promotion of cheap mining stocks, sold directly by the promoters to the public on subscription, had been overdone in the last two or three years, and that the whole business was in a state of decadence, but persons who have means of knowing say differently. There is a popular prejudice against mining stocks brought out in Wall Street and advertised from Wall Street addresses, which is natural enough in view of the innumerable swindles which have been perpetrated in that way, but the public is still very keen, it is said, for gold mining stocks and buys them freely when they are plausibly offered. A man who is more or less in touch with the business said last week that his observations led him to believe that the time is almost ripe for a tremendous speculation in gold mining stocks. The gold inflation about which people have been hearing so much in the last few years has prepared the speculative mind for it, he thinks, besides which some of the recent gold discoveries in this country have been so marvelous as greatly to increase the public credulity.

Two younger members of a prominent commission house have been unable for some time to agree upon the market. One is bearish and the other is bullish, and both are called upon by clients of the firm to give frequent opinions on the speculative situation. It would not do for them to conflict openly. That might so bewilder the customers that they would refuse to trade at all. A compromise of some sort had to be made, and it was made in this way: The bullish member, when asked to give an opinion on the market says that in his judgment it is a purchase on all reactions, and the bearish member, in his turn, urges the sale of stocks on all rallies. The curious effect of this arrangement is that so long as the market continues to be a mere trading affair, showing weakness and strength alternately, and moving within a narrow range of prices, both will be right. A pronounced movement either way would leave one of them wrong.

A new pool was formed recently to operate on the long side of Mexican Central, and critical persons are saying again, as they have said many times before, that the stock cannot be bulled from the level of 25 with the first income bonds selling also at 25 and the seconds selling around 18. These bonds, of course, come ahead of the stock. Mexican Central stock has always been bulled above the bonds, with people saying all the while that it could not be done. It has not only been done, but successfully done, and the reason is that people have only to be assured of an active market and they will trade in a stock without caring at all for such disparities. There are many other instances of the same thing in the present market.

One thing which the Ramsey-Gould contest has shown is that control of Wabash is actually in the open market, and has to be borrowed when an emergency arises. It is thought that the forced acknowledgment of this fact should give the Wabash issues a better standing in the market than they have had recently.

Central Leather shares became active yesterday and advanced a little. United States Leather, the old stock, on transactions of only 900 shares, advanced more than 2 points. There has not been any speculation to speak of in Central Leather since it was listed several months ago. If the interest in low-priced industrials continues to broaden, a bull campaign in Central Leather common will be expected. The origin of yesterday's activity was not clear. It was reported that buying orders were coming from the "Swamp," meaning the New York leather district. Orders from the "Swamp" used to play an important part in the market for United States Leather. Western people are heavily interested in Central Leather securities, and the Western houses in Wall Street are bulling them.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 14.—Dullness was the chief characteristic of the local trading to-day. There were more odd lots dealt in than 100-share blocks, yet commission houses reported they had practically no business. Price changes were unimportant either way, and consequently without any significance.

The new Lehigh Valley 4 per cent. collateral trust bonds have already been disposed of, Coxe Brothers & Co. taking $12,000,000 in part payment for their property, and $7,000,000 being purchased by Drexel & Co.

Total sales, 8,308 shares.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 14.—United Railways free income bonds were the feature of the trading to-day. The opening was ¼ off, but the lost ground was soon regained, the price rising ⅝ and closing at a net advance of ⅜.

The demand for investment securities was good. Cotton Duck 5s were ¼ up.

Houston Oil opened 1 point higher, at 7⅝, declining suddenly to 7¼, and closing with a net gain of ⅜.

The local market has been looking for a good bull card for some months. Many brokers believe that the settlement of the Maryland Trust situation furnishes this card. Houston Oil stocks are affected. Baltimore Trust advanced 5 points on consolidation reports. The rest of the local market shows a firmer tone, lending color to the belief that a new bull card has been secured. The close was firm. Shares, 660; bonds, $100,000.

Pursuant to order of the Board of Directors for the purpose of development of the Company's properties we offer for subscription 100,000 shares of the Treasury stock at half par, $2.50 per share—payments to be made at time of subscription.

Subscriptions will be received at the office of the Colonial Securities Company, 42 Broadway, New York, until 12 o'clock noon November 10, 1905, at $2.50 per share.

The Guanajuato Amalgamated Gold Mines Company own the world famous "Jesus Maria," "Villarino," "Sangre de Cristo," "Providencia," "Remedios" and "Dolores" mines, all on La Luz vein at Guanajuato, Mexico, which have an officially recorded production of over $25,000,000.

The "Jesus Maria" Mine has the record of yielding the greatest values in proportion to its size of any mine in Mexico.

The Company's mines have only been partly worked to the 850-foot level, and from the nature of the district, according to all authorities, these properties should be equally productive to a depth of at least 6,000 feet. The lowest workings on the same vein on adjacent mines to a depth of 1,487 feet have produced $140,000,000. The Company's mines should be equally productive when the same depth is reached. There is every indication that they will.

The mines are now producing large quantities of high grade ore under the most primitive methods.

The Company is installing the necessary machinery, a 100-stamp mill is being erected and the property will be equipped with all modern mining appliances for the purpose of obtaining at a minimum cost the greatest possible results from these mines and placing them among the largest dividend paying mining properties in the world.

The ore on the dumps and in the mines awaiting treatment will, according to the most conservative estimates, yield a net profit of over $5,000,000.

The capitalization of the Company is extremely low compared with the immense value of its holdings.

270,000 shares, with the par value of $1,350,000, have been placed in the Treasury for the development and extension of the Company's properties.

We present the only subscription offering of the stock of the Guanajuato Amalgamated Gold Mines Company, of which Albert J. Adams is president. Mr. Adams being at the head of the management is sufficient guarantee to satisfy every one of the success of the Company, and a positive assurance that it will be numbered among the most successful mining enterprises in Mexico. To those who desire a safe investment with assured profits, we offer this opportunity, which gives exceptional advantages of safety and possibilities of enormous dividends. We unqualifiedly endorse it and recommend its purchase.

Stock will be listed in due course.

Prospectus, reports, subscription blanks, &c., mailed upon application.

LEHIGH VALLEY BOND SALE.

Disposes of $7,000,000 Worth in Connection with the Coxe Purchase.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad, in connection with its purchase of Coxe Brothers & Co., announced on Friday, has sold to Drexel & Co. of Philadelphia $7,000,000 collateral trust 4 per cent. bonds. It is not stated that this represents the full amount of the securities to be issued in the financing of the Coxe Brothers purchase. In fact, it was reported from Philadelphia on Friday that the total bond issue to cover the purchase would amount to $19,000,000, but that a large part of the issue would be taken by the holders of the stock of Coxe Brothers & Co.

The details of the financing will not be announced until all matters connected with the purchase are adjusted.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Embroidered Hosiery Held Dutiable at 60 Per Cent.—Other Decisions.

In a decision by Marion De Vries, the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday overruled a claim filed by Wilson Brothers of Chicago, it being held that certain hosiery returned by the Collector of Customs as embroidered wearing apparel with duty at the rate of 60 per cent. is properly dutiable as classified by the Collector. The importers contended that the merchandise was entitled to lower duties in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph 318 of the Dingley tariff law.

Other importers' claims denied were those of J. S. Plummer & Co., E. R. Biddle, the Henry E. Frankenberg Company, Samuel Schiff & Co., John Zimmermann's Sons, (3,) Gratz, Kohn & Sperber, Charles G. Eckstein, Adolf Fricke, Ellis & Coltermann, and M. Schumacher & Co., New York; F. B. Vandegrift & Co., Philadelphia, and H. & A. Allen, Boston, Mass.

The board sustained claims filed by D. S. Forchheimer, New York, and H. Hamano, Honolulu.

A protest by Calixto Lopez & Co., New York, was partially sustained.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

HENRY M. RIBETH.—Henry M. Ribeth, a real estate and insurance broker of 987 Freeman Street, the Bronx, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities $1,074 and assets $15.

MARTIN C. SPREITZER.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Martin C. Spreitzer, a butcher of White Plains, by these creditors: Darling Brother Company, $47; Hoffman & Sons, $171, and Moses Straus Company, $296.

EDWARDS & ALLEN.—Judge Holt of the United States District Court has granted a discharge from bankruptcy to Edwards & Allen, formerly cotton goods commission merchants at 54 Leonard Street, who filed a petition in bankruptcy on Nov. 12, 1904, with liabilities $124,045 and no assets. Catlin & Co., who were creditors for $9,700, filed specifications of objections to their discharge on Aug. 9.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Some slight increase in volume and a noticeably greater diversity in the character of the properties involved have been the chief characteristics of the week's business. With not a few transactions of more than ordinary size and importance, daily reports have also covered almost the entire range from downtown buildings to Bronx lots.

There is apparently no falling off in the demand for vacant property in accessible neighborhoods or for sites available for improvement in the central parts of the city. With the sale of sixty lots in the block bounded by Manhattan and 129th Streets, Broadway, and Riverside Drive, the Tiemann estate disposed of the last of its large holdings in that section. This transaction is of more than passing importance, by reason of the fact that the building up of this block will be of very material benefit to the whole district around the Manhattan Street station of the Subway.

The block front on Central Park West, between Sixty-second and Sixty-third Streets, which has figured in various spectacular enterprises, including a balloon ascension, again appeared in the week's dealings, and the hope is very generally expressed that this sale of the property will lead to some project of more substantial character. The plot is one of the largest on any prominent north-and-south thoroughfare south of 110th Street, and in view of its commanding location, close to Broadway and overlooking Central Park, the wonder is that some improvement of it was not undertaken long ago.

Some interesting developments are looked for in connection with the properties on the south side of Liberty Street, between Temple and Church Streets. On Thursday announcement was made of the sale of the building on the Temple Street corner to an operator, and not long ago the two other small parcels in the block pased into single ownership. Other sales, on Cortlandt Street and that of a corner at Fulton and Dutch Streets, have pointed to a continuing demand for small properties in the downtown district.

The hearty support thus far accorded the Allied Real Estate Interests, in process of organization, has been a matter of general satisfaction among those who are interested in the fight against the mortgage tax. From all indications, there will be no lack of convincing evidence, in the shape of statistics, with which to carry on the fight at Albany this Winter. Now that a period has been reached, in which opportunity is afforded to judge of the real effects of the law, there can be no doubt that all of the objections raised by its opponents will be abundantly justified. The interest rate on mortgages has been increased by the amount of the tax, with the borrower, and eventually the rent payer, footing the bill.

LATEST DEALINGS BY BROKERS.

Jesse C. Bennett & Co. have sold for the Tailer estate the four five-story apartment houses at the southwest corner of Broadway and Eighty-fourth Street, on plot 112 by 102.2.

THE AUCTION ROOM.

The week's business in the auction room was not wholly of encouraging character. James L. Wells found buyers for the Wolff estate property of 110 lots, near the Grand Boulevard and Concourse and 174th Street, but other offerings of lots, in the Bronx and at the extreme northerly end of Washington Heights, near Fort George, developed decidedly disappointing results. The inference to be drawn from the lack of bidders for the Washington Heights lots is simply that operators have come to regard that section in a more conservative spirit, and will probably devote their attention for some time, not to anything and everything in that entire territory, but to localities close to Subway stations and available for immediate improvement.

Perhaps the largest of the offerings announced for this week is that to be conducted on Tuesday, at 10 A. M., at the Bronx Real Estate Salesroom, by Auctioneer Charles F. Sharrott. The property is that known as the Shipley estate, consisting of 48 lots on Daly and Vyse Avenues, 180th and 181st Streets, in the section between Bronx and Crotona Parks, Boston Road, and Crotona Parkway. The lots are one block south of Bronx Park, close to three different entrances, and are less than 600 feet from the Subway terminal at 180th Street and Boston Road.

Other large sales of Bronx property are also scheduled for the near future. On Oct. 31, 150 lots on the Southern Boulevard, Cypress and Robbins Avenues, 138th, 139th, 140th, and 141st Streets, will be offered. These lots were part of the Crane estate holdings, and the sale is held to effect a dissolution of the syndicate which bought a large part of the tract about a year ago. In the meantime considerable money has been spent in removing rock and otherwise developing the property.

The three blocks bounded by Jerome Avenue, Gun Hill Road, Woodlawn Road, and 212th Street, formerly owned by the Bruner estate, but now the property of the Century Realty Company, will be put up at auction on Nov. 9 by Parish, Fisher, Mooney & Co. The offering will consist of 170 lots.

A partition sale, announced by Joseph P. Day for Wednesday of this week, includes 474 Pearl Street, near Park Row, and 123 to 127 East 120th Street, near Lexington Avenue. On Friday, L. J. Phillips & Co. will sell the plot, 100 by 180, at the southeast corner of Washington Avenue and 164th Street, and four lots on 183d Street, near Washington Avenue.

Many prominent operators and investors are looking forward with much interest to the sale of the Aldrich estate's holdings on Oct. 25 by Auctioneer Kennelly. This offering, in point of the value of the properties involved, is probably the largest in the history of the real estate auction business. In addition to two Broadway office structures—the Columbia Building and Aldrich Court—the list of properties to be sold contains enough prominent parcels to furnish distinctive features for a dozen auction sales. Two other Broadway buildings, at 372 and 600 and 602, are also included in the offering, as well as a dozen properties on Murray, Warren, Chambers, Worth, and Leonard Streets, between Broadway and Church Street.

MORTGAGE FILINGS FOR WEEK.

There were recorded last week 285 mortgages for $3,487,559, of which 196, for $1,230,159, were at 6 per cent.; 39, for $454,150, at 5½ per cent.; 38, for $609,750, at 5 per cent.; 11, for $183,500, at 4½ per cent., and 1, for $10,000, at 4 per cent. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 341 mortgages for $6,043,253, of which 170, for $2,941,876, were at 6 per cent.; 131, for $2,097,577, at 5 per cent.; 36, for $933,800, at 4½ per cent., and 4, for $70,000, at 4 per cent.

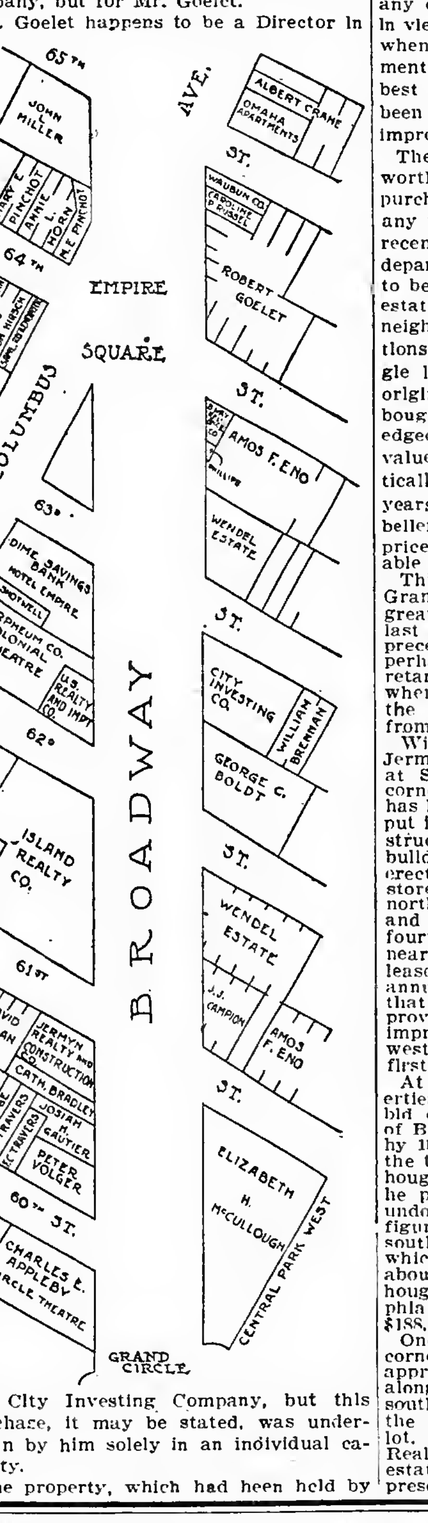
ROBERT GOELET BUYER OF $500,000 BROADWAY PLOT

Gets Nine Lots at Sixty-fourth Street Corner, Owned by the Marsh Estate—First Goelet Purchase of Any Size in Many Years.

Robert Goelet has bought the vacant plot at the northeast corner of Broadway and Sixty-fourth Street, together with three abutting lots on the south side of Sixty-fifth Street, about 100 feet east of Broadway.

The sale of this property by the estate of Rolph Marsh, for about $500,000, was announced several weeks ago, Robert E. Dowling, President of the City Investing Company, appearing as the buyer. Yesterday it became known, however, that Mr. Dowling bought the plot neither personally nor as the representative of his company, but for Mr. Goelet.

Mr. Goelet happens to be a Director in the City Investing Company, but this purchase, it may be stated, was undertaken by him solely in an individual capacity.



The property, which had been held by the Marsh estate for nearly half a century, is one of the largest parcels in single ownership along upper Broadway. Its area is nearly 23,000 square feet, or over nine full lots, with frontages of nearly 180 feet on Broadway, 110 feet on Sixty-fourth Street, and 75 feet on Sixty-fifth Street. The three lots on Sixty-fifth Street were sold by the Realty Finance Company, of which George R. Read is President, and in which W. G. Park and others are interested.

So far as can be learned, Mr. Goelet has not bought this Broadway corner with any definite scheme for its improvement in view. Presumably, at some future date, when the character of building—apartment house, hotel, or office structure—best adapted to this property shall have been demonstrated, the property will be improved and held as an investment.

The transaction is particularly noteworthy, however, in that it is the first purchase of any considerable size made by any member of the Goelet family within recent years. It also marks a decided departure from what has been supposed to be the policy of the large land-owning estates, that of buying, not in high-priced neighborhoods, but rather in remoter sections and waiting indefinitely until a single lot is worth four or five times the original cost of an acre. The corner bought by Mr. Goelet is a decidedly gilt-edged bit of property, and the fact that values in the neighborhood have practically doubled within the last five or six years has apparently not influenced his belief that the property, even at present prices, will turn out to be a very profitable investment.

This stretch of Broadway from the Grand Circle to Empire Square has shown greater signs of development within the last eighteen months than during the preceding decade. For many years it was perhaps the most remarkable region of retarded development to be found anywhere on Manhattan Island, practically the only revenue yielded by it coming from its vast array of billboards.

Within the last year and a half the new Jermyn apartment house has been built at Sixty-first Street. At the southeast corner of Sixty-second Street a large plot has been excavated and ironwork is being put in place strong enough to carry a tall structure, although for the present a building only two stories high will be erected. The Colonial Theatre and a new store and office building occupy the northwest corner at Sixty-second Street and at the southeast corner of Sixty-fourth Street a two-story structure is nearing completion and has already been leased to an automobile concern at an annual rental of $6,000. It is understood that the United States Realty and Improvement Company is considering some improvement of its block front on the west side of Broadway, between Sixty-first and Sixty-second Streets.

At the first sale of the Eno estate properties, in 1899, Justice Dugro's successful bid of $175,000 for the northeast corner of Broadway and Sixty-second Street, 116 by 106, was one of the prices regarded at the time as high. When George C. Boldt bought the property, about two years ago, he paid nearly $300,000 for it, and it is undoubtedly held at a considerably higher figure to-day. The adjoining plot, at the southeast corner of Sixty-third Street, for which the City Investing Company paid about $300,000 several months ago, was bought by Isaac H. Clothier of Philadelphia from the Storm estate in 1901 for $188,500.

One hundred thousand dollars for a full corner lot is now given by conservative appraisers as the basis for valuations along this part of Broadway. At the southeast corner of Sixty-fourth Street the small parcel, about two-thirds of a lot, owned by the Broadway-Reliance Realty Company, was sold by the Marsh estate for $52,000, and was resold to the present owners for about $65,000.

THE COMMERCIAL WORLD

WHEAT.—When supported by the leading Chicago bull wheat acted steady to firm on Saturday; at other times the market was heavy and inclined to drop off sharply. At best during the regular session prices showed about ⅜c advance in New York, while immediately after the close they declined to 90½c for December, or ⅛c under the previous night. It was said that a million bushels of December had to be purchased in the first hour by the Chicago bull operator to sustain the market. Room traders were bearish and hammered it freely whenever there were signs of any withdrawal of supporting orders. Cables reported ¼d net loss at Liverpool and a partial 25-point rise at Paris. In the way of statistics were Northwest receipts of 694 cars, against 773 last week, and 948 last year; the Broomhall estimates of 8,800,000 bushels for world's shipments was also rather bullish, and predictions were for a good increase in Monday's visible supply statement. The weather was stormy in Central States and colder in the Northwest, but cut little figure. Canadian millers reported that wheat was accumulating rapidly at terminal points in the Canadian northwest. At 1 o'clock December wheat in the local market was 90½c asked and May 90¼c asked. The cash market was steady, closing at 89¾c for No. 2 red in elevator and 91c free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern Duluth, 93¼c, and No. 1 Northern Duluth, 92¾c free on board, afloat.

CORN.—The early market was steady, but subsequent unloading produced weakness and prices declined below Friday's close. At New York there was moderate weakness, due to better prospects for getting corn through, although the cash market remained largely nominal. At 1 o'clock December in New York was 54c asked and May 49⅝c asked. Liverpool closed ⅛@¼d net lower. Rains and colder weather West had little effect other than to check sellers for a time. No. 2 corn closed nominal in elevator and 62c free on board, afloat; No. 2 white and No. 2 yellow nominal.

COTTON.—After a short period of weakness at the opening the cotton market rallied, and during the balance of the session ruled steady on covering of shorts for over the week-end and buying attributed to leading interests. The close was steady at a net advance of 3@6 points. Sales were estimated at 100,000 bales for the half session.

The opening was easy at unchanged prices to a decline of 2 points, and the market shortly afterward showed a net loss of 4@5 points under a renewal of bear pressure and liquidation. Reports that there had been a run on a leading New Orleans bank on Friday afternoon was a factor, but later it was reported that the run amounted to nothing of importance and was entirely unwarranted, and this aided in the recovery. The early weather news was also very bearish, but took a more bullish color before the close. The weather map showed still higher temperatures over the South, accompanied by generally favorable climatic conditions, the only rain being .02 inches at Fort Smith. It was also predicted that the low temperatures just northwest of the belt would work eastward instead of entering the belt, but the late forecast predicted another drop in temperatures for the Northwestern belt before Monday, and this was another factor in rallying the market after the opening break. The demand from spot people was claimed to be significant by the bulls, as indicating that local contracts were below a parity with the Southern spot markets and that spot people were not finding it possible to buy in the South. At this season of the year when spot people are buying South they are generally sellers in the local market. Large exports were also reported for the day, but the absence of frost damage accounts from the South promoted the idea that no material injury had occurred, and thus favored the continued popularity of "no scarcity" crop estimates.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 14.—Spot cotton quiet; sales, 7,000 bales; speculation and export, 1,000 bales; American, 6,000 bales; receipts, 11,000 bales, all American. Middling upland, 5.30d. Futures opened steady, 3 points lower on near and 4 points lower on distant positions; closed quiet, net 3 points lower; October and October-November, 5.21d; November-December, 5.25d; December-January, 5.29d; January-February, 5.32d; February-March, 5.34d; March-April, 5.37d; April-May, 5.39d; May-June, 5.41d; June-July, 5.43d; July-August, 5.44d.

COFFEE.—The coffee market opened steady at unchanged prices to an advance of 10 points in response to fairly good European cables, smaller Brazilian receipts, and a little buying by trade houses. There was continued Wall Street liquidation, and with further rains reported in Sao Paulo the market weakened during the session, with the close steady, net unchanged to 5 points lower. Sales were reported of 19,750 bags. The rains reported in the interior of Brazil are supposed to explain the slight falling off in receipts as compared with the recent average, and also suggest an improvement in the prospects for the coming crop, which was recently reported to be in need of moisture. But the present declining tendency of the market does not appear to be so much the result of a less bullish view of the ultimate course of prices as it does uneasiness over the evening up of the December position as notice day approaches toward the close of next month. There is believed to be a very large long interest in December. So far there has not been much switching from near to late months, and near-by longs have shown rather a disposition to liquidate outright. The absence of important fresh demand for the later position, to afford trade interests a chance to buy in the near-by long contracts against sales of the later months, is considered a factor likely to cause depression if there is not a distinct improvement in the demand from the interior, which at present is reported quiet.

The spot market was quiet, with quotations for Rio No. 7 ranging from 7¼ to 7¾c.

WHERE TENNESSEEANS GO.

Texas and Arkansas Get Most of Them.

The last census report, made in the year 1900, gives some interesting figures showing the contributions made by Tennesseans to the population of other States and Territories. That report shows that there were, when the census of that year was taken, 2,302,885 persons in the United States who were born in the State of Tennessee. The entire population in this State, including those not born here, was 2,020,616. We mention a few States that show in their population a large number of native Tennesseans.

Alabama	31,035	Mississippi	22,984
Arkansas	84,644	Missouri	64,972
Georgia	11,365	Texas	130,384
Illinois	32,471	Kansas	14,790
Kentucky	59,500	Indiana	11,284

These are some of the States to which Tennessee has contributed largely to swelling their population; but they are by no means all. When the census was taken there were 18,149 Tennesseans in Indian Territory. In New York there were 2,513 of them, and there was not a State in the Union or a Territory in which there were not persons who were born in Tennessee.

Of course the loss of native population was made up in some degree by the presence here of men and women who were born in other States. While Tennessee contributed 2,513 to the population of New York, there were in this State 4,093 that were born in New York. But while this State contributed 32,471 to the population of Illinois, that State contributed to the population of this only 6,707. But the showing of this State in comparison with Texas is the worst; while we had in our population when the census was taken only 694 native Texans, Texas showed up with 130,389 persons born in Tennessee as shown above. We had 19,496 persons born in the State of Arkansas, but Arkansas had 84,644 born in Tennessee. There is scarcely a Western State in which there is not a large number of Tennesseeans.—Knoxville Journal and Tribune.
